Mrs. S. Robertson, speaking on the department of the Stranger said that the follow-up work was very prominent in the care of strangers entering the country. Valuable Talk

The Kingdom of God Movement was the subject of very excellent and valuable talks by Mrs. Smyth, president; Mrs. T. Daley, past president and Mrs. D. W. Bews, Belleville.

Mrs. Bews speaking on the third, the Study of Work Problems, clearly demonstrated to the women their responsibility with regard to World problems as regards to the present time. It is vital for the preservation of world peace and for the success of their own W.M.S. work and for their own and non-Christian lands. The policy of the W.M.S. must be progressive. The W.M.S. has been criticized because it has failed to meet modern current problems—unemployment, nationalism, debt, slavery to money-lenders, etc.

To preserve the life of the W.M.S. we must face these modern problems. We must realize (1) our responsibility (1) to you; (3) to the home; (3) to politics; (4) to temperance; (5) to peace.

In the Quite Hall-Hour, a wonderful message was brought to the women by Mrs. J. G. Scott, missionary nominated to India. Taking as her foundation thought "As Jesus Prayed," Mrs. Scott illustrated from her own experiences among the people in India, chiefly among the sick and suffering. So many opportunities are afforded in the hospitals to bring the beautiful story of the Gospel to those who know not Jesus, and the results are often beyond expectation. Mrs. Scott concluded her address everyone with many stories of actual contacts with the people in India, both high and poor, the blind, the lepers and the suffering, and of the marvels brought through Prayer. Resolutions Passed

Among the resolutions passed at the conference were the following of interest:

Whereas leading scientists of the world have found that alcohol is a narcotic and as such is no danger—in any form; and whereas the effects of the use of alcohol as a beverage do not end with the physical but extend to the moral and social life; and whereas the United Church depends on the youth and maiden of tomorrow to safeguard and to promote the moral and spiritual life of its organization: Be it resolved that we desire to express our strong disapproval of the beer and wine amendment which permits the opening of beverage rooms as these constitute a strong temptation to the young people as well as a menace to the safety of our highways.

That we urge upon our members the duty of furthering world peace through educational peace programs, exerting personal influence in building up a public opinion opposed to war and the favoring of any legislation that would prevent the piling up of privats profits through industries peculiar to war time.

For many good and sufficient reasons be resolve, that we continue an aggressive and militant warfare against the liquor traffic; that we seek through every facility at our disposal to arouse our citizenship from apparent indifference to a righteous and holy wrath, so that our province may soon be delivered from the tenacious grip of this evil, and furthermore we urge the immediate withdrawal of Dominion Board to continue to exert pressure on the present government, so that such forces may be effected in the present liquor laws as will give favorable relief from what we believe to be the most disastrous legislation the province has known for years, and further that we ally ourselves more closely with the temperance forces in the promoting of all educational and constructive temperance effort.

Oshawa, May 10.—(CP)—Department of National Defence is carrying on an experiment in armored cars at an automotive plant at Oshawa, officials stated today. Experiments are designed to test the feasibility of various methods of protecting motor cars with armor.

Pressed as to the possibility of arranging standard trucks in case of military necessity, officials stated that test might develop something in that regard.

Officials said the experiments did not extend to tanks, but only to armored cars. Similar experiments have been conducted in the past.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Man Who Reclaimed His Head"

The man who had no "head in The Invisible Man" reclaims his head when Claude Rains comes back to the screen in "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head", new feature attraction at the Capitol.

Joan Bennett has feminine lead and the supporting cast includes such well known players as Lionel Atwill, Baby Jane, Walker, Ford, Henry O'Neill, Lawrence Grant, Henry Armetta, Moroni Olsen, Hugh O'Connell, Gilbert Emery, Bessie Barriscale and Ferdinand Gottschalk.

The story has to do with a brilliant French journalist who is employed by a powerful newspaper owner to write sharp, biting editorials for his paper. The action takes place in Paris in 1915. When Vertin (Rains) discovers the duplicity of Dumont (the newspaper owner), who in reality is plotting against the government with his country's enemies, he denounces him. Before he can take any action, however, he is called away to the Front. While there, he learns of his wife's unfaithfulness with Dumont. Enraged and heart broken he leaves his regiment, by a clever ruse and rushes to his villa, where he finds his wife quarreling violently with Dumont. Vertin fires and kills Dumont. He takes his baby daughter and goes to his attorney, confessing the crime, and asks him to defend him. The attorney readily agrees as he knows Vertin was justified for personal and for patriotic reasons in ridding the world of a menace like Dumont.

And what of the wife? Will that would you do? Maybe Claude Rains or the same thing.

"Young and Beautiful"

Feminine film fans are getting a genuine thrill from "Young and Beautiful", featuring the 1935 Wampas Baby Star and a cast specially cast the second attraction on this same bill.

Judith Allen and the bevy of beautiful Wampas Stars are offering an advance view of coming styles that every woman will enjoy, and so far there has been no complaints from the male contingent in the audience.

Claire Julianne, noted New York designer, has created a special evening gown, appropriately entitled "Young and Beautiful" costume, which is a marvel of smart simplicity. Manufacturers and designers of smart apparel in all lines have co-operated with the producers to display, months in advance of regular store showing of lingerie, gown suits, next year's bathing suits, bags, jewelry, footwear, millinery, raincoats and other frills and fripperies dear to the feminine heart.

This sartorial display is not presented in the trite idea of a "fashion show" but is woven right into the latest things for the proper occasion in scenes of a thrilling and particular type of garment.

"Young and Beautiful" is the forerunner of a new type of motion picture, embracing as it does, various elements of comedy, drama and music interwoven into a delightful ensemble of entertainment.

Capitol News showing latest current events will be shown at each performance. Last complete show 8.45.

SATURDAY ONLY
"Tallspin Tommy" thrilling air serial taken from Hal Forrest's popular comic strip.

TANGLED LIVES

By ANN FORESTER

THE LAST STRAW
CHAPTER SEVEN

Maddy dropped the pink dress in her lap and turned incredulous eyes on her cousin.

"Joyce! You can't mean it!"

Joyce had swung to a cross legged position, chin propped in her hands sullen eyes regarding the other girl.

"Why not? I'm through with it. And Alan."

"But—but gosh! It's real silver!" Maddy was aghast at such prodigality.

Something weary and cynical had slipped over Joyce's young face like a mask. She was seeing herself trying to stem advancing fate with such ineffectual little toys. What was that old story—about the boy putting his thumb in the crack of a dyke to hold out the ocean? All right, in a story, perhaps, but one couldn't hold back all the weight of Norman's world with a silver vanity case.

"I mean it. You can have it, Maddy. And you can have the lace handkerchief, too, and that bottle of French perfume."

"Why . . ." gasped Maddy. "What's come over you, Joyce? Don't you want them?"

Instead of answering this Joyce's brooding eyes went around the room. She saw it clearly as though she viewed it for the first time. An ugly square space sweltering in summer, freezing in winter. Cracks in the white plaster walls like wrinkles in an old face. Cheap Japanese matting on the floor faded to a sickly green. It was cold and hostile to bare feet on a winter morning. Floating on its surface like a faded island was a rag rug before the bed.

The bed itself was chipped white enamel, and the mattress sagged toward the middle so that Joyce and Maddy slept in enforced neighborliness no matter how sultry the night.

The bureau was imitation golden oak. Whenever she had stood before it dressing to slip out and meet Norman, Joyce had never noticed this. Her heart had been too full of stars and dreams to care about the white stains left from cheap perfume or the spot which was blistered from Maddy's curling iron.

But now the dreams and the stars had faded. She felt jealousy burning in her heart.

Suppose Natalie Cameron had to live in such a room . . . Natalie's room would be crisp and lovely as a rose. Orchid and silver, someone had told her it was. Joyce had returned it—suggested by the illustrated advertisements in the back of magazines.

Natalie's dressing table would be a crisp affair of glass gleaming with silver and crystal like the pictures of famous dressing tables in the cold cream advertisements.

It was unfair! Joyce thought bitterly. After all it was just another exotic thing which made the difference between Natalie Cameron and Joyce Allen. But men were dense in such matters . . . Norman would not stop to think that it was the Cameron money which made Natalie so desirable. He would only see her walking against the red-hazel background making its beauty her own.

Awe was still battling with greed in Maddy's face. Maddy's green eyes were incredulous.

"Do you really mean it, Joy? That you're really giving me the case—and the perfume?"

That coveted perfume! An unexpected suite party had stopped at the Commercial House late one night. When Joyce had tidied the room the next day she had found a lace handkerchief and a half empty bottle of French perfume left behind on the dresser. At the time they had been precious—something to add to her value in Norman's eyes.

Now her voice was very tired when she answered Maddy. "I mean it. Why not? They're too little to matter—" Then with a fierce little rush of anger, "Someday—someday, Maddy, as sure as I'm sitting here, I'm going to have all the beautiful things I want! Everything I want!"

"Sh-sh-sh . . . Let me in on the secret. There's lots I want too. How are you going to manage the miracle?"

Joyce's soft young mouth was grim. "I know, I sound like a fool! But if you hate all this enough—" a sweep of her bare arm at the ugly room "—and want the other things badly enough—well, I believe you'll get them!"

Maddy shrugged, but she was not inclined to argue with the good fortune which was dropping silver cases and French perfume in her lap. She picked up her sewing in silence.

Joyce continued to sit cross legged, picking at the hem of her rayon step-in. Head bent, eyes brooding until the familiar pool of feet sounded in the hall. The door creaked open and Mrs. Slade, carrying her shoes, slumped against the door frame, eyeing them accusingly.

"I over step an' of course neither of you two would call me! Once on now—fusslin an' nag me! Your Pa'll be sore's a boil if he comes back an finds things ain't done. Maddy, you come help fix the vegetables. Joyce get into your dress an' hose down the front porch an' steps. It'll cool 'em off a bit."

Riverton was coming to life after the slumberous heat of the day. The long shadows of the maples stretched across the dusty street and there was the faintest stir of the evening breeze in their leaves.

Machines began to appear carrying a few of the more energetic golfers. This end of South Main Street joined the state highway, the only direct road to the Country Club a few miles further along.

Joyce tugged the hose around from the back yard and began to wash the sagging wooden porch. The flare up of spirit which she had shown, to Maddy had faded. An intense bitterness, surged over her and left her tremulous and desolate in its wake.

She turned the hose on the wooden steps, not caring that the dirty water spattered up from the corners and stained her stockings and the bottom of her dress. Faint steam rose in a cloud from the warm wet wood, and little midges danced in it.

Joyce seized the stubby broom and attacked the steps with vicious energy. She took perverse pleasure in getting hot and tired and dirty. As though she mocked at herself and her dreams of beauty.

She was scrubbing the street before the entrance when the rumble of a machine caused her to lift her head sharply. Heart stopped, then pounded madly. Heartstrikingly familiar, that blue car turning the corner. Norman's car. Norman driving. And beside him, immaculate and cool in green chiffon which turned her to an ivory figurine with hair of gilt—Natalie Cameron.

Only a moment while they passed, for a moment which was the pivot on which turned three destinies.

Joyce could see in that flash of time, the dismay which swept into Norman's face at the sight of her. She reversed his quick, boyish same trivial remark to Natalie his ears scarlet. Natalie's cool eyes swept over the other girl with no trace of recognition. In grammar school days they had known each other but Miss Cameron was quite aware of the gulf which stretched between The Crest and the Commercial House.

They were gone—swinging into the Country Club road, leaving a red heart still staring after them. A helpless fury on her white face while dirty water swirled unheeded about her feet.

JOYCE TAKES THE LEAP
CHAPTER EIGHT

"Eat your dinner, Joyce."

"I don't want any. Honestly, Aunt Clara."

Ezra Slade lifted his head and scowled. When women didn't eat they got sick. And sickness meant doctor bills.

"Do as your aunt says!"

Joyce looked at the pot roast and tapioca congealing on the plate before her. She lifted tragic eyes. Eyes that pleaded with the watch'ful faces across the table.

"I—I just can't, Uncle Ezra. I don't feel well tonight."

"You'll feel worse if you don't use some sense and eat!"

Ezra's strangely mustache cultured voice with suppressed and futile rage. Dyat the girl, she was too big to be spanked! Five years ago he could have coped with this situation as befitted the head of the house.

The Slades were eating their evening meal of the kitchen table. Hastily—that they might all turn to and wait on "the lady" when the Cannery whistle blew. Crowded table and littered sink. Faded linoleum with the worn spots before the stove and sink. The windows were wide to the languid air here the golden tinge of the sun still lingered. Long afterward Joyce could recall the smell of dust and dried grass which stole in. She could even remember a moth fluttering in the open space. Across the table Aunt Clara's heavy dull face. Ezra Slade's sharp grey one. Nell's grimly downcast eyes and crooked little finger as she cut her meat. Maddy's glance, steadily commiserating.

And suddenly without quite knowing how she reached that conclusion, Joyce knew that she was eating her last meal in the Commercial House.

By ten o'clock the Commercial House was shut up for the night. Aunt Clara had wheezed her way upstairs, panting with each step. Nell was asleep in her small dungeon beneath the eaves. Maddy had departed for Briarville via the bedroom window.

And up in her room Joyce quietly strapped her packed suitcase.

While she waited for Ezra Slade to come upstairs and leave the path clear Joyce changed her clothes, pulling off her gingham housedress, putting on the white crepe de chene she had made with much high hopes for Norman's visit.

From the depths of the spotted glass her own image looked back—a slim ghost with smoldering eyes. Frightened but cold determination in her heart. She was going to take Old Roger Cameron's advice. She was going to break out of the web.

Then came upstairs. Listening intently, Joyce could hear the two dull thumps which told of the removal of his shoes. She waited long minutes after the house grew still.

Eleven o'clock.

With breathless pauses to listen, Joyce put down the suitcase and made her way to the cash register. Teeth digging into her lip, she counted out some paper money.

Not quite fifty dollars.

As she jammed it into her shabby handbag she hotly apostrophized the absent Norman.

"It's your fault I have to take this! You owe me this a hundred times in salary! If you'd paid me —if you'd ever been kind to me, I wouldn't have to do this!"

Joyce's heart leaped and a sick weakness went over her at a sharp creak in the stairs. But it was merely the warping of woodwork as the old house relaxed after the hot day.

Down past the rows of small tables, their oilcloth tops gleaming in the reflected arc light through the windows. Then Joyce was undoing the front door and letting herself out on the porch.

As she walked swiftly down the street she found that she was shaking. Her fingers were cold despite the warmth of the night.

Just before she turned the corner she looked back. Softened by the shadows of the maples, the Commercial House squatted, watching her go. Tomorrow it would hum with the rush of guests here. Ezra would storm. Aunt Clara would cry hysterically. Maddy would gossip importantly about it as she waited on the dining tables. Nell would stare at the reflected importance.

Even up on The Crest it would be a tidbit of gossip. Natalie and Norman —talking her over together with pity and shame in her heart at that. None of them would understand how she had been hurt. None of them would understand this fierce pride—this smarting need to be somewhere, to rise above the shabby environment of The Commercial.

No one—except, perhaps old Roger Cameron. She found herself resenting the crabbed old man with faint gratitude. He would understand. Strangely enough, of all Riverton he had understood. "You are set in the life of the town," he had said. Yes. Roger Cameron would understand, Joyce felt— and secretly he would approve.

All of this was drifting through her mind as she walked down to the end of the railroad station. Oddly enough she thought little of the future. She would get to the city and get work of some kind—that was enough for the present.

She avoided the brightly lighted railway station lingering down in the gloom of the freight sheds until the train roared in.

Like a dream—when she climbed into a car. Paying the conductor .....following the porter down the narrow aisles of green curtains to the berth which was assigned to her.

She was too restless to go to bed. Joyce decided. She left her suitcase in her berth and walked down the train to the Observation car.

The train jolted beneath her feet and her heart leaped as she realized that she was actually leaving Riverton behind.

Only one party was left in the Observation car at this hour, two men and a women sitting chatting at the further end. This much Joyce noticed as she entered. They were quickly forgotten as she slipped into a chair and looked out the window.

The cross streets of Riverton raised by. "Cheap Jack's Restaurant" where the railroad men ate. Hasbett's Candy Box. An Army and Navy Store where a man slouched in the ill lighted doorway.

The train was roaring with increasing swiftness along Railroad Avenue where small wooden houses squatted in weedy gardens. Now they were rumbling across the river trestle—where she and Maddy had walked on Sunday afternoons before she met Norman.

Through cornfields. Past white country roads bordered with tall dry thistles. It whistled for the little cross roads-town of Briarville, but did not stop. Then they were off, roaring through strange country, flat and black and a little frightening. A strange shaking in Joyce's heart. Never had she felt so totally alone. Her hands were hot and tightly interlaced. She stared rigidly into the night, and her eyes stung with tears.

So intent she was on her own bitter feelings, that Joyce missed the little hyphy of those three others at the end of the car.

From the moment she had appeared, one of the men had been staring at her. A heavy dark man in early middle age. His heavy lower lip was pursed thoughtfully while he regarded the girl. He bent over. Spoke to his two companions who turned and stared at the girl.

After a moment the woman rose and made her hesitating way up he aisle. As she neared Joyce's chair, she allowed the train to throw her to one side.

She gave a little cry, stumbled, and almost fell into the startled girl's lap.

Roslin, Ontario, May 7th

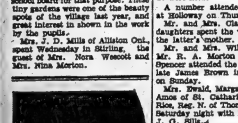
To Mr. and Mrs. Orlean Parks:

Today all over the British Empire there is great rejoicing and celebration over the occasion of King George's Silver Jubilee.

In London, Edinburgh and all the leading cities, villages and hamlets expressions of loyalty and love are shown.

In the village of Roslin in Scotland, and in Roslin, Ontario we too rejoice with our sovereign.

In our joy we couple with that occasion the fact that two of our young people have recently been married and that, like the jubilee, will always remain an outstanding day in their lives.



We your friends have met here tonight to express to you both our interest in your welfare and to wish you every happiness in the future.

We would ask you to accept this gift as a token of affection and goodwill for you both.

May God guide you; bless you, and keep you always, is the sincere wish of your many friends in Roslin community.

Signed, William Johnson, Herbert Alderton, William Bates.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, May 10—(CP)—Ollo continued to be the leading feature on the Toronto Industrial market, trading in volume unequalled in more than six months and gaining up to two points. Gains were registered and held in Canada Cement, Steels and Revenue but some soft spots while steel and consolidated mining were inclined to follow the oils. The day's turnover of 400,000 shares was the second largest of the year.

The leading oil stocks bounded ahead today on heavy volume, the buying stimulated by the regular and extra dividends declared and announced by Imperial and International Petroleum this morning. Imperial traded about 30,000 shares in the morning session and climbed to 39 1-4 where it showed a gain of 1 3-4. International Pet. at 36 1-8 was up more than 2 points. Rivals ranging up to 200 passed through the 100 mark. The gains were not always shown by bid sales on the tape, trading was slow.

Behind the oils, Supertest preference and McColl recorded fractional advances. Other groups moved moderately in the afternoon, but Metals and Mines were conspicuously lagging in price on good turnover. Ford A gained 1-4, while Ford of C.P.R. were easy.

TORONTO MINES CLOSE

Toronto, May 10—(CP)—The mining board of the Toronto exchange today was the scene of the most active trial markets today, being content to remain within narrow limits. Although there were some issues, particularly the oils and silvers and also in a few of the gold mines the fractions in the oils were not spectacular and they, as well as small gains in the silvers, were pared down in the last hour. The board showing a predominance of declines instead of at the close.

Trading was concentrated in the oil and silver stocks with spotty interest in the gold and base metals. Although the New York corpses formed up the rise of the copper issues was not notable there was considerable support in narrow gains recorded. Hudson Bay, Consolidated and Base Metals Corporation.

The only mention of about a ton brought in some buying in the white metal group at higher prices during the forenoon session, they slowed down in the afternoon. In the gold, higher prices were paid for Lakeshore, Little Long Lac, God's Lake, Bralorne, Pioneer and Hollinger, while Wallinger turned heavy and Macassa was offered down to 3.18.

Strong members of the oil group were Bayallis, Ogia, Home and Anglo.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, May 10.—(AP) —The strength of Utilities added the stock exchange's recurrent considerable rallying in today's session. Although the list as a whole, backed away from its extreme gains in late dealings, the power company issues held around their best.

Advances of 1 to 3 or more points were registered by American Telephone, Peoples Gas, Public Service of New Jersey, Columbia Gas and Gas, Union Carbide, Corn Products and United Corporation. Substantial movement was shown by U.S. Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, Standard Oils of New Jersey and California, Santa Fe, Union Pacific and Douglas Aircraft, the latter more than 5 points, Transfers approximated 1,500,000 shares.

LITTLE GIRL SAFE DESPITE RUMOR

Did Not Fall in River But Simply Exploring City

Anxious moments were spent by the parents of little Jean Campbell, age six of 26 West Bridge Street, this morning, when she disappeared from home following which a rumour was heard that a girl answering Jean had fallen into the river. The parents immediately notified the police and following a thorough search of the city, the little lass was found safe and sound at the upper end of Front Street where she was merely exploring the city.

Little Jean was not missed from her home until neighbours informed her parents that a little girl named "Jean" had fallen into the river. Subsequent investigation by the police showed that another local teen aged girl by the name of Jean had taken quite a spool of water nearby this morning. Naturally coupling the disappearance of their daughter and the story together gave the parents of Jean Campbell many anxious moments, but soon Jean was home safe and sound, none the worse for her experience.

Mr. Tupper suggests if an alternate method is thought advisable, shooting might be considered.

SHORE GAS CO'Y SERVES NOTICE OF OSHAWA APPEAL

Appeal Lodged From Decision as to Assessment

Oshawa, May 10—Notice of appeal was served on the Corporation of the City of Oshawa by the Ontario Shore Gas Company, Ltd., through its counsel, G. D. Conant, K.C., appealing from the decision given by His Honour Judge Ruddy in his appeal against the assessment on the company's properties in Oshawa. Judge Ruddy gave judgment on April 6, reducing the company's assessment for school purposes from $132,000.00 to $33,285.00, but confirming the fixed assessment for general purpose at $84,-000.00.

The grounds for the appeal are cited in the notice served on the city as follows:

"That Bylaw No. 2004 passed by the Respondent on the 7th day of April, 1931, and the agreement thereby authorized purporting to fix the assessment of the Appellant's property at $84,000 was at the time of the passing thereof and is now, ultra vires the respondent illegal and void.

"That the Learned Judge having found the proper assessment value of the Appellant's properties to be $33,285.00, the total assessment of the Appellant properties for the purposes and for all rates should be the said sum of $33,285.00.

The notice of appeal has been filed with the Ontario Municipal Board, before which body it will be argued.

J.D. ROCKEFELLER FRENCH IN ORIGIN

Descent From Roquefuils Family Traced by Genealogists

Paris, May 10.—John D. Rockefeller, America's oldest multi-millionaire, is of Huguenot descent, French heraldists revealed.

Research into old archives and churches has unearthed evidence that the oil family can be traced back to the distinguished and titled Roquefuils, who centuries ago ruled with an iron hand in the region of Aude, in the old days of the Lot-et-Garonne Department.

The Roquefuil family, which was connected with the famous houses of Bourbon, D'Aragon, D'Braganze, D'Autriche and Medici, had its stronghold in a heavily fortified, moat-encircled castle, now a ruin, perched high on a hill, dominating the entire section of the country-side.

Known now as the Chateau de Roquefuil, ancient portions of the Rockefeller forebears still is regarded as an architectural monument, experts say, although its turrets are beginning to crumble and its massive walls are thick old moss.

Money-Getting Hereditary

French genealogists and heraldists said the Roquefuils amassed huge fortunes through commerce. Their vineyards, tilled by serfs, produced the best purple cloak of the best amber-red wine that was quaffed in Europe during the 14th and 15th centuries.

They sought refuge abroad and some found their way to America where the Anglicized version of the name became Rockefeller through the generations. Heraldists said, in connection with reports that the American Rockefeller family may have descended from German or Dutch ancestors, that some of the original Roquefeuils also went from exile in Germany and Holland, but the family tree has its root in France.

RUNT GUNMAN GOES TO CHAIR

Choses Career From Petty Thieving to Murder And Kidnapping

Huntsville, Tex., May 10—(AP)—Raymond Hamilton, exhibiting even his last smidgen of spirit of the vicious conceit, that helped make him ranking United States public enemy, died meekly today in the electric chair.

He followed Joe Palmer, his partner in the slaying of Major Crowson, prison guard, to the execution chamber.

The electrocution of the 22-year-old gunman closed a crime career that began with sneak-thief operations in his native Texas and ended swiftly to bank robbery, kidnapping, prison breaks and murder.

Hamilton's death was in marked contrast to his talk. He bragged he never would be taken alive but he surrendered meekly when Bill Decker, Dallas Dep. Sheriff showed a pistol in to his ribs in a Fort Worth railroad yard a few weeks ago. One of his last acts was to send a word of thanks to Decker for not shooting him first.

So nervous did Hamilton become late yesterday as his hopes of escaping death faded one by one, prison officials had feared he would be unable to unaided through the ordeal.

He managed to do that, but his face was ashen and his attempt to smile little more than a brief grimace as he entered the execution chamber.

"Well, goodbye all of you," were his last words as the death mask was adjusted after the electrodes had been applied and he had been strapped in the chair.

SAYS LAWRENCE RAISED ISSUES

"More Difficult Than Those Which He Solved"

LONDON, May 10.—(AP)—In a book called "Iraq," published here, the author, Ernest Main, contends Lawrence of y Arabia from the viewpoint of Iraq "raised problems infinitely more difficult than those he solved."

A former managing editor of the "times of Mesopotamia" Main now edits a newspaper at Baghdad a few miles from where Lawrence, under the name T. E. Shaw, died at a lonely cottage.

In the book just published, the author asserted was "to start tendencies and release forces which are not yet worked out to their end."

Lawrence's weapons in his Arabian work, were "his personal powers, his electric personality and his ability to create an atmosphere which no Arab born could resist", Main declared.

Stranger than his powers of persuading the Arabs was Lawrence's success in persuading the British command to place enormous sums of British gold at his unfettered disposal.

INCOME TAX PLAN STIRS COMMENT

Mayors And Others Give Opinions on Provincial Tax

Windsor, Ont., May 10 (CP) — Varied were the comments today on Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn's intimation the provincial government might impose an income tax. Some expressed opposition, others approval and still others indifference.

"We already have income taxes, business tax, school taxes, dog taxes, and a dozen others," exclaimed Mayor Arthur Reaume of Sandwich. "Why another one? I am absolutely opposed to it."

Alderman John Duck of Windsor said it was better to have a provincial tax than a municipal tax that is "only half heartedly operated".

London, Ont., May 10 (CP)—"If the provincial government intends to give us a cut-back in some of the revenues then the move is certainly one in the right direction. But ought to be carried a step further, the province making arrangements to use the federal machinery for income tax collection," says Mayor Nicholas Bruyea in commenting on Premier Hepburn's income tax proposal.

Guelph, Ont., May 10 (CP)—Approving the principle of substitution of municipal revenues for the provincial levy, City Clerk H. X. R. Lemay today expressed the view the whole matter of collection should be handled by the Dominion government.

"The Dominion government, which has the machinery, should collect the whole thing and pay the municipalities their proportion," City Treasurer Miller suggests the Ontario government should not be a party to the extent of putting provincial income assessment on a par with federal income assessment, and relieving municipalities of all employment relief. Under the new scheme it would mean a reduction in taxation in St. Thomas of about five mills.

Brantford, Ont., May 10 (CP) — Official said, in connection with reports from Queen's Park I do not care to make any statement concerning the matter.

M. A. Colquhoun today regarding Premier Hepburn's proposed provincial income tax.

"The basis of reimbursement for the municipal levy is not yet defined and upon this a great deal depends. Our assessors are working strictly limited even now and we cannot afford to have them further restricted," said the mayor.

Chief Assessor Harry W. Pierce said: "Any such plan for the assessment of existing municipal income tax with a uniform rate of 35 mills would involve the supervision and a levying of exemptions to correspond with the federal exemptions."

Unethical Business Practices Condemned by Presbyterian Synod

Rev. J. B. Thomson Attacks Liquor Traffic For its Results

TORONTO, May 10.—(CP)—In an attack against the liquor traffic before the Toronto-Kingston synod of the Presbyterian Church in St. Paul's Church today, Rev. J. B. Thomson declared on his return home from the other night's session he found his daughter had been publicly molested by two drunken men.

"The two men got into the street car near a beverage room and got off at my daughter's stop," he told the Synod. "They followed her and molested her so she had to run for dear life to get out of their hands. I was out, but they had gone, else I might not be here today."

Pleading for definite action, Mr. Thomson declared the Presbyterian Church "has built a wall around itself and would not co-operate with other bodies. To loud protests from the floor, Mr. Thomson replied "Well, I think I could prove it. At any rate, we are not doing all we might."

Reporting to the Synod a special committee on Social Service voiced condemnation of unethical business practices whereby many profits supersede human values."

In some cases low wages have been paid by employers who realize employees might go on public relief, Rev. Ross Cameron charged, in presenting the report.

Justification for the welfare of humanity was urged for those mentally and physically unfit. The increasing number of divorces was deplored as detrimental to the welfare of children and society generally.

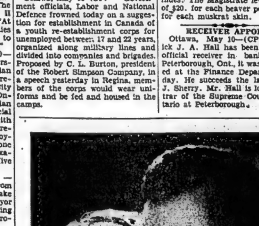
By THOMAS T. CHAMPION

London, England, May 10 (CP)—Their Majesties sprang a surprise today when, to the delight of the multitude gathered around Buckingham Palace to witness the changing of the guard, they drove out to see the decorations in some quarters of London.

The tour was absolutely unscheduled and a complete surprise.

The inhabitants of the densely populated areas visited today, with women clustered around street huckters stalls in many places, were first surprised to see the trim equipage and then dumbfounded when they recognized the occupants.



Shopping baskets were waved frantically by women on the sidewalks while tenants from the upper stories waved dusters or anything they could lay their hands on. The great news spread rapidly ahead and people rushed from side tourts, and alleys into the main streets with a great humult of welcome.

Converted Third Sacker Stops Cardinals by Flinging 4 Hit Performance for the Phillies

William "Bucky" Walters May be Answer to Wilson's Prayer

BLANTON DEFEATED

Chicago White Sox Lose First Game at Home to Boston

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, Jr.
Associated Press Sports Writer

One of the newer risen stars of the National League pitching corps has taken his first ball but another moved right up to take his place.

When Darrel (Ivy) Blanton, Pittsburgh's sensational young right hander, met his first defeat of the season at the hands of the Giants and Carl Hubbell by a 3-1 count yesterday he became for the time being just another good pitcher. His place in the sun was given over to William (Bucky) Walters, the Phillies' home-town boy, who was converted from a third baseman into a pitcher and celebrated by hurling a four-hit, 5-1 triumph over the world champion Cardinals.

Although he tried the mound for seven innings in the game with the Reds, Bucky was still listed as a spare third baseman for the Phils. He had pitched as a sandlotter, however, and begged so hard for another trial that Manager Jimmy Wilso gave it to him and found he had another starting pitcher for the bands.

Walters made his second start Wednesday, allowed the Cards only three singles and a double and handed over five runs. The Phils' Cardinal run was unearned. To top off the performance Bucky drove the winning run himself off Bill Walker, stellar St. Louis southpaw, when Mickey Haslin singled him home in the ninth.

Close Wildness Cause

Blanton's wildness was the principal cause of his own downfall, as he rang up six strikeouts for a season's total of 36. But two of his five passes led to the first run and an error and two blows brought the other pair. Meanwhile his first baseman, Hubbell, lost a shutout through Arky Vaughan's sixth homer of the year.

Brooklyn remained in second place two games behind the Giants with a 3-4 "git" victory over the Reds. Two runs were forced in by walks and two more scored on an error in the third inning, which produced all five runs. With Tex Carleton pitching a neat five-hit game, the third-place Cubs slammed out a 5-1 victory over the Braves in a game marked by Rabbit Maranville's 1,900th appearance since 1923.

Cleveland Indians sailed back into the American League lead as they trimmed the Yankees 5-0 in a contest shortened to five innings by rain while the Red Sox finally broke the "charm" the home park has held for Chicago by slamming down the Cub home 10 to 1 behind Wes Ferrell. It was Chicago's first home defeat of the year and Ferrell was the first visiting pitcher to go the route. Rogers Hornsby's Boston Braves put up into a virtual tie with the seven-game Giants by taking a 6-5 decision on Dick Coffman's six hit pitching. A three run homer in the fifth, batted by Wally Moses' error, decided the game.

PETE APPLETON COMING ALONG

Hurling For Royals at a 750 Clip and No Sign of Faltering

(By the Associated Press)

Pete Appleton isn't the International League's leading pitcher but the right-handed Montreal Royal Star is giving the other jawlers in the circuit something to shoot at.

Dividing his services between Baltimore Orioles and Rochester Red Wings in 1934, he finished the last season with 11 victories against 13 defeats for an average of .458. When compared with Walter Beck's 20 victories and Lee Sevenoy's wins and six defeats Appleton's season was hardly impressive. But that was last year.

On April 26 Appleton started against Jimmy Scrabone and was taken out in the second inning for big Chief Elmer. The Royal's ultimately won the game 12-6. He returned to the mound the next day and gave a four-hit performance to give the Royals a 3-2 victory over the Orioles for their first win of the season. He had been beaten by another start.

A few days ago Appleton was sent in against Syracuse Chiefs and again was defeated on his own 3-2 decision but this time he gave five as the Royals won 8-5.

In the only game played yesterday—the other three being rained out—Appleton twirled the Royals to a 9-2 decision over the Senators as he limited Albany to seven scattered hits, allowing only one extra base blow and fanning six. It boosted his record thus far this season to three wins and one defeat for a percentage average of .750.

While Appleton toiled effectively on the mound, Frank Demaree led the Royals' attack on two Albany pitchers, getting four-for-four. Jake Plummer drove in both Albany runs with a four-bagger at bat with a hooker and two singles.

PURCELL STILL CHAMP

Los Angeles, May 10 (CP)—Jack Purcell, world's champion badminton artist, was still champion today. He met and defeated with ease last night Jess Willard, United States titleholder, in three straight sets, 15-7, 15-6, 15-9.

Willard, who challenged the Canadian, was completely baffled by the speed and skill of Purcell, who also displayed a remarkable change of pace.

CANZONERI AND AMBERS TO MEET

Fighting For Lightweight Crown Vacated by Ross

By Ben Cavanaugh
New York, May 10 (AP)—A new lightweight boxing champion will be crowned tonight, when Tony Canzoneri, former wearer of the crown, and Lou Ambers, one of its bers meet at 15 rounds in Madison Square Garden.

They will battle for the throne abdicated by Chicago's Barney Ross, who announced recently that he was no longer could make the weight limit of 135 pounds. Canzoneri's case of tickets indicates the fight will attract close to 18,000 capacity with the receipts about $80,000.

Ambers rules the betting-odds choice at 8 to 5, but Canzoneri, a New Y., hurricane's youth and strategems are probably figured no strong for Canzoneri's fast breed down the walls of tradition and become the first former lightweight titleholder ever to regain his crown.

Canzoneri has 125 fights behind him and won the title in 1930 when he knocked out Al Singer.

After concluding eight years to his rival, the one thing seen in Tony's favor is the fact that he's a harder hitter than Ambers.

Details of Ruth Deal Leak Out Causing Considerable Feeling

Yankees to Get Good Pitcher in Sending Ruth to Boston

(By Edward J. Neil)

New York, May 10.—(AP)—Details of the deal between the National and American Leagues, whereby the Boston Braves acquired Babe Ruth are beginning to leak out and here and there forks considerable hard feelings, particularly in Brooklyn.

It seems when the matter of placation of some importance. the club owners got together and talked the situation over.

The Yankees didn't want Ruth any longer but they had to have a right hand pitcher, Boston, and the National League wanted Ruth and there were pitchers in the League that clubs wouldn't sell or trade to each other but didn't mind sending to the Yankees, in the American League league appearance since 1933. be bobbing up to annoy them by causing ball games away from them.

So the Yankees agreed to pay $125,000 for Waltergill League pitcher and the National League club owners agreed a lot from which the Yankees could choose. In return for Ruth, the Yankees get Ruth his unconditional release and Kemp went the Babe to Boston.

The last turned down by Joe McCarthy, manager of the Yankees, because Kemp is a left hander and like one of Joe's favorites when he was piloting Chicago Cubs to a pennant in 1929.

Col. Jake Ruppert cheerfully mailed Sam Breadon of the St. Louis Cardinals a check for $15,000. The National League club-owners, keeping their managers in the dark about the whole business, waived Radnai. Al Dunlop. The semi-final bout on this spectacular card brings a new face to town in the person of Man Mountain Jones, a 271-pound wrestler from Glendale California, who meets Jack Pearl of Toronto. Jones comes to Canada highly-recommended as a wrestler and has been signed by the sports to brute strength to subdue his rivals. Ring-rust in itself is a stand-out tonight.

Dykes Leans on Rookie Hurlers

Chicago May 10 (AP)—Notes on the White Sox while they last (and worns say they will):

Manager Jack Dykes has leaned on his rookie pitchers so heavily that they've pitched a combined total of 56 2-3 innings in the first 10 days of the veterans. Until the last two days Dykes used a pitching staff of three at a time.

Five regulars are batting over .300—Hayes .372; Jones .333; Simmons .333; Radcliffe .324 and Dykes .310.

Joe Kuhel, criticized by some experts as a poor fielder at first base, has made an error.

Hayes has started seven double plays.

Ripper Radcliffe, who has been batting the ball all over the premises, uses the lightest bat in the Majors. It weighs only 32 ounces.

Johnny Whitehead the Texas rookie pitcher, who won four straight, is the silent man of the team. His mates have to ask questions to get him to talk.

BAER INJURED PREPARING FOR A RADIO SKIT

Suffers Powder Burn as Gun is Accidentally Discharged

NOT SERIOUS

Will be Ready to Keep Date With Braddock June 13

Asbury Park, N. J., May 10—(AP)—Heavyweight champion Max Baer had a powder burn on his chest today and some very decided ideas about persons, who play with firearms as a result of a studio accident.

Jerry Casale, attached to his camp, was watching. There was some talk of armed efforts.

Casale decided the sound of the revolver shot, heard over the air, wasn't loud enough. He loaded a revolver with blank cartridges, accidentally pulled the trigger and the gun went off injuring Baer superficially.

"But they can't keep a good man down," the champion said when it was all over and he had received an injection of tetanus anti-toxin.

"I'll stand me, but I'll be back in a day or two getting in shape for that guy Braddock."

Baer, Max Schmeling's conqueror is James J. Braddock, contender for the heavyweight crown. They are scheduled to meet June 13 in the Madison Square Garden Bowl in Long Island City, but Schmeling's manager Joe and Dr. Silverstein thinks that is unlikely.

"I never did like guns. I'm afraid of them," Baer said.

PROTEST DISALLOWED

South End Athletic and Yacht Club held a general meeting at the Club House on Wednesday night after the club business was finished, the meeting was thrown open for the settlement of the protest by Harold Reed against M. Callaghan on Monday's sailing race.

Owing to some of the sailing committee members being interested parties in the boats concerned, it was decided to ask the approval of both owners that five boat owners be formed a committee to render a decision on the protest.

After hearing various ones speak on the committee retired to the Anti-room and after quite a lengthy discussion, returned with the verdict, protest not allowed, leaving the After You 11 the winner.

INDIAN ACE

CLINT BROWN

Cleveland Indians are this year conceded an excellent chance to win the American league pennant. Their hopes rest largely on the pitching staff to hold up the powerful hitting line-up, and Clint Brown, above veteran right hander, is looked to for the main assistance. Brown had a fine 1934 season, being handicapped with injuries and a sore arm but he has rounded into shape well and may return to his old-time form. He once was one of the best flingers in the game.

"CLOTHIERS OF QUALITY"

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Apparently the lacrosse jig is up locally, that is insofar as playing in an organized circle is concerned. President Fred Waghorne was in town yesterday and after talking matters over with him for his matter of a few minutes all tangles were straightened out. The executive activities were clearly outlined. First and foremost President Waghorne assured us there was no chance of the Aajmaa boats team getting into the "outlaw" Tri-County League, Lindsay, Millbrook, Peterboro, Port Hope and Interme-diate points have organized this league and although not affiliated with the O.A.L.A. will operate among themselves. The only alternative left for the local boats appeal was to affiliate with the provincial body and promote a try into the intermediate play-downs. In the meantime, the Aajmaa boats team will be open for all engagements for as many exhibition games as possible. Over-zealous fans, what a financial gamble these exhibition games are, we can't realize but our team must have competition before the season opens, so were starting off with an exhibition game versus the sturdy Scarboro "Orads" on the 24th," stated Manager Bill Fry today.

When President Waghorne was in town yesterday he at least accomplished something, as a meeting of all boats under the jurisdiction of who are interested in lacrosse will be held in the Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday night next. President Waghorne, Secretary Bill Fry and J. E. Sheriff of the Y.M.C.A. will preside over the ultimate result, that President Waghorne said Secretary Fry has no idea of forming a local junior league, every boat in town, similar to the Ki-Y hockey or softball leagues. During the progress of Tuesday night's meeting, the executive will be told how they can proceed in the matter of getting such a very low figure, as a matter of fact only a fraction of their initial cost. It sounds like a boy scout affair, but the fact that travelling out of town for some games and then in itself should elevate the game to a higher plane. Secretary Fry yesterday President Waghorne seemed quite optimistic in regards to the future of lacrosse in the communities.

Railway Amalgamation Not Being Entertained Says Hon. R. B. Hanson

No Stranger To City

Hon. Mr. Hanson after being introduced by W. E. Tummon, K.P., in a few words of his political career announced, that he was no stranger to Belleville, having lived in the city about twelve years ago. "I am proud of my allegiance to the Conservative Party," said Mr. Hanson and "I am willing at all times to be a fighting soldier and to perform any duty of which I am capable." He praised Mr. Tummon for his interest in his riding, remarking that he had been a true and faithful one and ready at all times to promote any scheme or plan for its betterment. The speaker also spoke of the late Sam Porter, with whom he was associated in the House of Commons for many years. Mr. Hanson stated to his audience he was a Blue Nose and proud of the fact and pointed to the records of the Nine Provinces by the sea, that they had given to Canada four Premiers and all happened to be Conservatives as well as four Ministers of Finance, whose total years of service was half a century.

It was believed that they had done more to mould the fiscal policy of the Dominion than any other part of the country. The little Provinces had also contributed to the growth and educational life of the Dominion in no small measure," said the speaker. "But the good old Province of Ontario has been the backbone of the Dominion since Confederation and I hope, that it always will, Hepburn notwithstanding.

On Eve of Election

"We are on the eve of a general election according to our democratic principles," continued the speaker, "and those whom we elect should be held responsible. He reviewed the record of the government at length since it was returned to power in 1930, telling of the situation that confronted Hon. Mr. Bennett and his party, when they assumed the reins of office. The depression had just started, the speaker intimated, while an adverse balance of trade was in evidence and Canada was committed for payments of huge sums of money, the interest on which was nearly one million dollars a day. Hon. Mr. Bennett set about his task of raising these sums not by borrowing, as Hon. Mr. King had done but by effecting certain trade agreements, that would work to the advantage of Canada. "At the time of assuming power," said Mr. Hanson, "every trading nation had closed its doors by raising tariffs to a point almost prohibitive. I want on record to this fact in the House of Commons and it has not been controverted."

"Up until 1921," continued the speaker, "Canada traded with the United States but on the election of the Harding administration an emergency tariff was enacted aimed against this country, another in 1922 and 1930 the Hawley-Smoot bill was passed. There was only one country that said it would be willing tariffs against Canada and that was England and I make this statement without fear of contradiction, that Canada lost markets under the regime of Hon. Mr. King. There were other problems confronting the Premier when he took office, any one of which would be sufficient to test the best brains in the world. These was the railway problem, the wheat problem and many other great problems, but all were tackled with vigour, even the unemployment situation." The speaker told of the special session of Parliament, which was called at which two things were down, money voted to relieve the unemployment situation and the fiscal policy adjusted to give to Canadian industry and Canadian labor a fair opportunity to compete not in the markets of the world but in Canada.

England Logical Place

The speaker at this point asked the question, "Where should Canada go for a market, but to England?"

PHILIPPINE LENIN

Benigno Ramos, absentee head of Filipino Sakdalista party is believed responsible for stirring bloodspotting near Manila, recurrence of which is being anticipated by heavily armed constabulary patrolling district.

"I admit, that Hon. Mr. Bennett failed in his first attempt to secure a market in England in 1930," said Hon. Mr. Hanson, "simply because England was wedded to a policy of free trade, that was instituted by William Pitt, but in 1932 he did not fail." The speaker admitted that British Preference was not a new policy nor the idea original for Sir Charles Tupper he said had advocated this preference in 1891 and Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1909 also Hon. Mr. King had tried to introduce the same policy in 1930 but Canada at that time was not ready for the evolution. When the evolution in the fiscal policy came to England in 1932, the statesmen were ready to give the idea a fair trial and thus were born the Ottawa Trade Agreements, that have been so beneficial to Canada. Had these agreements not been made it is doubtful whether Canada could have carried on because they were the only sheltered markets in the world," the speaker declared.

Tracing the agreements, that have been put in effect, the speaker said that these agreements were negotiated with different countries, rather than twice the number negotiated by any other government and he protested the statement, that Canada had lost numerous markets of the world. He referred briefly to the agreement now pending to be made with Italy, which word's materially assist the Dominion. Turning to the Marketing Act, Hon. Mr. Hanson declared that representatives of England going off the Gold Standard were felt in Canada, and that the Dominion might have closed up shop had it not been for the present Premier and Minister. He also showed how the closing of the banks in the United States to help stem the revolutions in Canada but showed that the Canadian Banks or the Insurance Companies in Canada did not fail because of the "Peace Order in Council" order in council put in the Relief Act, whereby the government could take over the banks should conditions become such as to necessitate it when the occasion demanded.

Policy of Reform

Coming down to 1934, Hon. Mr. Hanson, showed how the Premier had started on his policy of reform, which was in part to be far reaching effect on the future life of Canada. He quoted the act of the Bank of Canada, stating that big business got a rude jolt by its formation and that the government being the fountain head of currency, should control the currency. "True the bank is publicly owned but it is controlled by the government," said the speaker and the name of Canada has not been dragged down in the mud in a financial way like that of Ontario because Premier Mitchell Hepburn saw fit to bargain contracts.

Turning to the Marketing Act, the speaker admitted that for many years, the primary producers were at the mercy of the buyers but that the State stepped in and big business was dealt another blow by the passing of the Marketing Act. "You never heard of the Liberals doing this men at the head primary producers," said the speaker and he pointed to the tobacco act as an evidence, that the marketing act is working against big business. The social legislation of Premier Bennett was touched upon, Hon. Mr. Hanson stating, that Hon. Mr. King only put through the Old Age Pension in 1926 by bargaining with Meighen for the Senate power. The speaker referred to the book "Unrest in Humanity" written by Hon. Mr. King in 1918, explaining there never has been any indication on his part of putting into practise, that which he preached in his book, "the thoughts in a book" said the speaker, "but Bennett has made them operative."

It was clearly shown by Hon. Mr. Hanson that the unemployment insurance measure was not a relief measure for that situation but that it was a measure to help against the next cycle of depression and he charged, that Hon. Mr. King had been remiss in his duties in not relieving the situation, when he was in power. The railway problem was dealt with at length by the speaker, he remarking that people had been too optimistic in the early years of railway life in Canada and that three transcontinental railways were built, where one would have been sufficient. At one time the speaker declared the operating deficit of the C.N.R. was 78 millions a year but this had been reduced to 42 millions and that the findings of the Duff Commission had helped to further reduce the cost of operation. He outlined the two major proposals of that commission the first being "no consolidation" and the second "fairness to the privately owned railways." These recommendations were given effect to in the passing of the Railway Act and by section 37 of that act, the speaker playing a major part in the framing of the section, there was to be no amalgamation of the two railway systems but that co-operation and co-ordination should take place as far as reasonably possible. Hon. Mr. Hanson believed that the railways had turned the corner and that the deficit now existing would further but that people must support their railway. He charged that the Liberals had bedevilled the railway problem and defended the action of Premier Bennett in the lending of a loan to the C.P.R. to ride them over their financial problem, believing it would have been a black eye for the Dominion had the C.P.R. been allowed to go into bankruptcy.

Comparison Made

In closing Hon. Mr. Hanson compared the Liberals to Canada in a throne sitting on their haunches waiting for old "King Depression" to put them back into power. He also charged that the opposition were too cowardly to strike and oppose the legislation brought down in the House of Commons but sat back and belittled the efforts being put forth by Premier Bennett and his loyal body of workers. Hon. Mr. Hanson praised the people of Canada for their fortitude in times of stress, for their respect for law and order and he declared although there was still some unemployment no one would be allowed to starve. The speaker was given a fine reception at the conclusion of his address and James F. Hill, M.P.P. moved a vote of thanks for the splendid address and confidence in the present Prime Minister of Canada. Three hearty cheers were given. The meeting also went on record as giving its unqualified support to the newly nominated candidate.

Mr. W. E. Tummon, M.P., being called upon after nominations had been closed, expressed his delight at the splendid turnout. He thanked his nominator and seconder for the honor conferred upon him and believed that the Conservative party would go into the coming campaign with renewed vigor and with the assurance, that it would be returned triumphantly again to power. The member for South Hastings stated, that the Liberal party came into power in 1930 with the outlook none too bright but he believed the clouds were lifting and that Canada would again be on its way to prosperity. He praised the Premier, Hon. R. B. Bennett for his efforts on behalf of the people of Canada, stating that he had greatly impaired his health by his super human efforts to cope with the problems facing the government. He believed that the Premier would be restored in health and that he would lead the Conservative party in the election.

Quarter Million For Riding

Coming down to the riding of South Hastings, Mr. Tummon stated, that more Federal money had been spent in the riding than in any term previously, not counting the money paid for relief or to maintain the Relief Project Camp at the Trenton Airport. He stated, that practically one quarter of a million had been estimated for the riding with Belleville getting about one quarter of this total. Mr. Tummon expressed regret, that the work for which it was appropriated had not been started but stated that it would have been had it not been for the Liberals who sat back and would not pass the estimates. Speaking of his candidature, Mr. Tummon made it quite plain, that if he was chosen of the convention he would work at all times for the riding but if some one else won he would be behind the candidate, vote hunder per cent.

"I am entirely in your hands" said Mr. Tummon. "I have never canvassed the delegates, having stated, that I would support the candidate, who received the support, it should be voluntary. If you want me, I will do the best in the coming campaign and if I am not, your candidate, I am behind the one that will be chosen by your vote."

"The large attendance augurs well the success of the Conservative party in South Hastings, said Howard D. Graham of Trenton. He was pleased to see so many ladies present and taking an active part. "Every man at the present time have an exceedingly difficult time" said the speaker "because of the demands on their time. Mr. Tummon has given of his time in this riding even at the expense of his health. I mention this because I have seen the time from my personal business to devote to a campaign.

George E. Stokes, formerly alderman of Hastings County, the next speaker stated he was behind the Prime Minister Hon. R. B. Bennett and any candidate, that was chosen at the convention. He told the delegates of the importance of their position, and the responsibility entailed in choosing a candidate. "We are facing a real conlict" said Mr. Stokes "but if we have an united front we can win. It would be folly to allow any name to go to the convention, because I believe I can do more and better work as a private in the ranks."

Not Grandstand Election

George A. Reid, Ex-Mayor of the city and Hydro Commissioner at the outset of his address informed the delegates, that he was not seeking the nomination but was whole heartedly behind the candidate to be chosen. "This is not a grandstand election" said the speaker, "but a hard fight and a house to house canvass is necessary to put the issue beyond any possible doubt." Mr. Reid offered his services to the candidate chosen in any capacity he saw fit to use him. He criticised the Liberal government and stated the country had enough of that kind of rule for the past eleven months in Ontario was any criterion and the best way to end the election for the Conservative party would be to invite Mitchell Hepburn and his cabinet down to this riding.

Alderman Richard D. Arnott after thanking his mover and seconder of his nomination stated he approved the choice, that had been conferred upon him. "I have only been in the political game for a few months" said the speaker, "but we have in this city organization a live wire organization but I am of the opinion that the Conservative party organization is not functioning to the best of work. True we are all confinced and well satisfied with the merits of the Conservative party and the government now in power in Ottawa but we must sell that idea to the man. We must get his attention, that is not paying much attention. Each one of us must get out and work. I would like to let my name go before the convention because I like a fight, and I think a good clean fight for the nomination is not harmful to the party's interest and I am not afraid of a licking but at the present moment, I would be satisfied for me to devote the time necessary to ensure success at the polls."

Impossible to Stand

Dr. H. R. Welsh of Roslin told his listeners it would be impossible for him to contest the convention but that he was greatly taken with the audience and asked a question. "Are you here just because you are a Conservative or are you interested in the larger sphere?" Premier Bennett must appear before the responsible to the farmer, the small man. As well as the commercial and business man. "I have been associated with the farmers nearly all my life," said the speaker "and I know they have had a difficult time the past few years but they are getting a'pain for they have hope in the present Prime Minister. The government has done its utmost to promote happiness. A few were disappointed at the first conference in England but after the Ottawa meeting everyone said that we had a real Hon. R. B. Bennett. The trade agreements were only a beginning greater reforms are on their way, and every bit of legislation being passed is only a step in the direction of the development of the reform policy announced by the Premier. The electors have the choice of three parties with the Conservative party taking the lead with a definite policy."

William Hubbard, former M.P.P. for West Hastings stated at the outset, that he was not a candidate for the riding but he was whole heartedly behind Ernie Tummon. "We never had better representation in Ottawa", said the speaker. "He always carried out his duties in a gentlemanly manner and had it not been for the wreckers at Ottawa we would have work done on the riding before now."

Charles A. Payne, K.C., thought the constituency ably represented by Mr. Tummon and that he was the logical candidate under the existing conditions, "being a member is no sinecure" said Mr. Payne and the man that takes it must take the responsibility of the office and I have had the time to devote to the same. As I am the last nominee on the list and as all others have withdrawn, I declare W. E. Tummon, the Conservative candidate in the coming election.

What price SPACE MR. ADVERTISER?

It is not only more economical . . . which is a matter of easy computation . . . it is not only more flexible, it is not only more timely and rapid, but also it is the advertiser's unfailing point of contact with the mass market and every spot market of the Dominion of Canada.

The Daily Newspaper possesses a power by means of which an advertiser, who knows how to use it, can reach and move to action all or any part of the Canadian consuming public.

In this North American continent there was spent during 1934 in the columns of the daily newspapers more than $500,000,000. The strongest of all supplementary media was used to the extent of $144,000,000. Why?

Because for prompt action on sales plans . . . for quick consumer influence at minimum cost . . . for willing co-operation from the retail trade, the daily newspaper of today, as it always has been, the outstanding and most economical basic advertising medium.

GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS

Daily Short Story

CONTENTMENT

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Sometime ago an outlying newspaper conducted the idea of a contest in which readers would write in and tell their philosophy of living. The editor frankly named it a "Contentment Contest," asking readers why they were content to remain in the small town and what were the various ambitions they had.

Many and diverse were the letters sent in. Some admitted that they liked the small-town life because there was not so much competition as in larger places. And some admitted just as frankly that they were lazy and a small town always has been the best place for a lazy man.

In Poetry

However, one man sent in his philosophy in poetry and when the contest closed, the editor awarded him the prize. His poem follows:

Ten years can bring me no regret
Because
In golden prime of careful skill—
Alone I travel fragrant trails
That lie about my quiet town.

"I never fell man's lust for fame,
Content was I to go my way
And thank the Lord for each new day,
That brings the poppy's scarlet flame.

"For each new year that brings the deer,
The bittersop and daffydill,
The lengthened shadows on the hill,
And tell that tide my cares begone.

"In God of man my soul to keep
And then I close my eyes to sleep
In peace that knows no spectre dread.

"I am unlouched my Jason's fleece,
I live in quiet happiness:
Content is all that I possess
Amid the world's farflung cess—
But my content has brought me peace."

Now, it might be said, the editor was enthusiastic over the poetical genius of the writer, whose name, believe it or why not (?) was John Jones. The editor quoted Mary's "Full many a gem of purest ray serene the dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear," giving his readers and also to Mr. Jones the idea that Mr. Jones had written something that was above the ordinary. That was very nice, except that it went to Mr. Jones' head.

Gosh!

Too, friends acquaintances and well-wishers, generally, went out of their way to congratulate him upon his poetical genius.

"Splendid letter that the stuff you read in the big magazines," he was told, and from any satisfactory Mr. Jones went into a blissful assurance.

"Could write if I wanted to," he said. "That there's nothing."

Now, friend reader, do you get the point? Mr. Jones decided that he WOULD WRITE for the big magazines and show the world that he was a singer of sweet songs. And he forgot his farming and he forgot his cows and chickens and chores and spent his time writing—with every last spare moment he could paste.

Quite discouraging. Suddenly, out of his belief in his own genius, he sent scads of fifty poems to Professor of English, State University, asking for honest criticism.

The professor was honest. Mr. Jones hadn't written anything of any value as yet and—the professor was quite distressed—did not seem to have the ability of writing anything of value.

The letter struck Mr. Jones straight between the eyes. He sulked—it took him two hours to read the page and a half. Each line caused him to put the letter away in agony, and yet caused him to bring it out for one more glance.

John Jones was in internal torment, and next day, when he appeared on the street he found the praise of his fellow villagers barbed. He read sarcastic meanings in their salutations—and went home and wrote another poem. It was from the heart. He called it "Reincarnation" and gave it to the editor to print. It said:

"No more am I no glory bent.
I seek at last to find content
Within the bonds of given life.

So far from mad ambition's strife.

"In youth I cried that I would claim
My share of life's majestic fame,
But I, who tried, soon lost my way;
Now I am satisfied to stay
Amid mine own environment
Where lazy joys bring no lament.

"The moral of my homely rhyme
Is simply this, while there is time,
Appraise yourself all honestly—
What there of greatness do you see?"

The editor printed the poem with more words of eulogy, and townspeople renewed their praise, urging John Jones to write for the "big magazines." But John Jones merely shook his head.

"That there poem means exactly what it says," he declared. "I am no more on glory bent."

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper pop said, I think I'll step around to Peet's and indulge in a little quiet bowling, and ma said, Now Willyum you'll do exactly nothing of the kind because you promised to work out the bridge problem with me tonite.

When did I promise that, if it's not too personal a question? pop said, and ma said, Well, at least I asked you to and you didn't even dare to reply, and silents gives consent.

O, so, I did, pop said. Do you mind if I turn on the radio while we're doing the problem? he said, and ma said, Certainly not, go ahead yerself.

It's just about time for the broadcast of the prize fite, pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum I said radio! I don't mean anything like that. The last time you listened to that awful thing it pritty near drove me crazy with its left jab rite jab, rite jab left jab till I could of screamed, and pop and so his and so and so and so and so his him back again, and what if they did, who cares? she said.

A million palpitating he-men obey, pop said. Maybe they never personly punched anything except time clocks or meat chopps or communication tickits, but just a some they care immensely. It seems too more exciting to agree to do a boring thing like a bridge problem you built at an intirely more educational event like the fite broadcast, it seems just too bad, pop said.

And pa went to the radio and turned it on and it started to wurk, saying, for what a walloup, rite on the button. Markey is groggy but he feeds with his rite and mixes. Paskay lands with his left and lands a rite jab to the rib, they clinch. Markey lays the mit with a haymaker. Paskay lands a rite hook and a left jab to the jaw.

Swell, bring on your bridge problem, pop said, and ma quick went and turned off the radio, saying, O go on and bowl.

With pop did, winking a private wink to himself in the hall mirror on his way out.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED—

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

Below Tarzan were no larger branches that he might clutch as he lunged downward. His foot caught in a looped creeper so that he turned completely over and alighted on his back in the middle of the village street.

At the sound of the breaking limb and the crashing body falling through the branches, the startled blacks scurried to their huts for weapons. When the bravest of the emerged they saw the still form of an almost naked white man.

Tarzan lay where he had fallen. Seeing that he did not move and that none of his kind were in the tree, a dozen armed warriors surrounded him. One was for thrusting a spear through his heart, but Numabo, the chief, would not permit it.

"Bind him," he said. "We will feed well tonight!" They tied Tarzan hand and foot with thongs of gut. A crowd of natives gathered to see the new prisoner. Then they carried him into the hut where another white man also awaited his fate.

STEVENS PLACES OBLIGATION ON WEALTH

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Hamilton, May 11 (CP)—The first pitches of this baseball season will be made here on Monday, May 20, when Hamilton Tigers and Buffalo Bisons, members of the International League, open their home season at the Hamilton Civic Stadium.

Hamilton, May 11 (CP)—Charges of conspiracy to commit murder, and of attempting to murder Mrs. Mary Ann Sadlier, 50, were withdrawn against her husband, Joseph Sadlier, 52, when they appeared jointly in police court today. Mrs. Sadlier was charged with attempting to murder her husband by shooting him with a rifle. Sadlier was charged with conspiring with his wife to commit murder.

Windsor, May 11 (CP)—The body of Paul Gregory, middle-weight pugilist of Windsor, was found in the Detroit River here Friday morning.

It was discovered the President's flag was flying upside down over the office of Mayor Murphy.

Cornwall, Ont., May 11 (CP)—In 20 months the end of the first and Joseph P. Fournier, K.C., believes he will have cleared the city of its $1,000,000 debt. He said that he will pay it now by the sinking fund method instead of the serial method as was called Fournier's pay.

Ottawa, May 11 (CP)—The Canadian Government had refused to recognize a committee they had appointed to supply labor for public works projects and they wanted, further, to have labor recruiting carried on by Relief Department.

When the parading crowd reaches the Colonial Building in the afternoon to present the demands, it was said by police, they have been invited to turn them away, for most of the Commissioners have had open house, but the demonstrators continued.

Police Swing Batons

Then, wading into the mob, the policemen swung batons right and left. All over the spacious grounds, a general battle went on. Newspaper reporters and photographers arrived and one pressman—John T. Meany —was dropped with a seab wound, though he was not hurt seriously.

A second photographer, with a camera, had the camera smashed, while George Wilkinson, unemployed workman, was severely wounded and taken to hospital.

The government did not meet the men but it was made known control of public works was to remain with the department.

Nine hundred rioters took part in the afternoon disorders, and no more ran riot through the streets during the day. Only a few small demonstrators were short-lived—they lasted for less than an hour—but they were sharp.

As the police sped through Water Street—the main thoroughfare—motor lorries, jobless men lurking in doorways, hurled missiles down on them. Others smashed store windows, and crawling in through the broken panes . . .

Riding their skids freely, the police men followed them into the buildings and drove them out, and in little more than a few minutes the streets were clear again.

AVOID HITTING COW BUT FOUR ARE KILLED

Truck Swerves on Highway and Crashes Into Car

Standish, Mich., May 11.—(AP)—Four men were killed and a fifth probably fatally injured today when a truck and an automobile crashed near here, while the truck driver was attempting to avoid hitting a cow on the highway.

The dead are George Clauve, M. R. Miller, Herbert Maxwell, and Harold Gowing, residents of this vicinity. Ernest Streeter, driver of the automobile was reported dying. The truck driver escaped.

Whale of Tale About Tail of Whale As Black Back Scratched on Boat

Vancouver, May 11—(CP)—Captain S. MacKinnon, master of the trawler Skooky M. comes into port with a whale story to tale about the tail of a whale—indeed, about the tail of two whales.

It seems the Skooky M. was rolling on top of the waves near the north end of Queen Charlotte Island.

The boat took a gentle bump and the captain of the craft, Capt. Leask, so been always the potentialities I am telling to take it easy and develop it for the railway. The thing is so big it's absurd to have it lying idle.

"Get outa here," shouted the captain.

For reply the whale lifted its limber tail and brought it down hard with a splash. Even the whale was startled and he made off.

Whales do that sometimes, landmen are informed—come up to scratch their backs on floating craft, because the sea barnacles are paradise which irritate them are pretty bad. A few years ago an unsolved tragedy in Tacoma, Wash., harbor, when a 100-foot vessel capsized and drowned all hands, was ascribed to an itchy whale.

Postmen Carry Guns as Chain Letter Fad Grows

Night Clubs Transformed Into Five-Buck Passing Pit

By TOM YARBROUGH

Oklahoma City, May 11—(AP)—If the gentleman who sent the chain letter fad is dying should come here today he would find—

Postmen carrying guns.

Hundreds of wild-eyed get-rich-quick willingers clustered around mushrooming chain-making establishments like bees about a sugar-lump.

More traffic than at Christmas time.

The largest night club transformed into a five-buck passing pit.

Policemen harried by requests for special protection by scores of chain centres as a result of the first holdup.

A threat of action by H. J. Jones, collector of internal revenue, to prove a mail deterrent as money-hungry, pop-eyed citizens scurried to extend the line last night.

Jones was prepared to act on a law prohibiting his department to assist lottery and personal property of a person who might leave the district without settling his income tax but that was for the "camp followers" on the trail of suckers.

Gentleman Scores Out

As a gunman descended upon a centre where almost 100 persons were playing the chains, he took occasion to give them all a sound cursing for being "foolish" enough to take part in the fad and then scurried away with a loot totalling more than $100.

Chain letter fans, hoping to make a fortune out of an initial investment of a few dollars, flocked to exchanges in a residential section every store in one block was given over to chain promoters with their notaries and typists.

One promoter hired a taxi and with a case of liquor visited his friends, mellowed them and sold his robbery.

"We are not delivering any of the special delivery letters containing $5 at night," said R. A. Griffith, postal inspector. He added that letter-toting the rich-assaying mail had been armed to forestall robbery.

PAINTERS UNDER "CODE"

Hamilton, Ont., May 11—Painters and decorators of Hamilton district may shortly come under the Federal Industrial Standards Act which sets up a "code" and makes employers and householders responsible for paying their wages and observing fair working hours.

Silence Striking In Far South

Washington, May 11.—(AP) — Friends of President Roosevelt and official Washington had pre faded in the ears of Rear Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd today before he began contemplating still another venture into the Antarctic.

"Yes, naturally I'm thinking of going back."

For the next year, at least, he said he will be busy writing a book and delivering lectures all of which have been contracted for.

The Admiral told yesterday of the thing that impressed him most during the four months he spent alone on an Antarctic hill studying weather conditions.

"The silence was striking," he said. "In the woods a person thinks he is silent, but here there was no life of any kind. No noise.

"The snow? It was up to the top of my shack. I got my carries by keeping it shoveled away".

VICTIM OF GRIEF IS KING'S WIDOW

Brussels, Belgium, May 11—(UP) —The Queen Mother, Elisabeth, widow of Albert, King of the Belgians who ill in Italy, sinking daily despite efforts to arouse her from her melancholy over the tragic death of her warrior husband two years ago.

Despite official denials from her household here, the United Press learned reliably that Elisabeth is unable to sleep or rest.

She grieves constantly and her grief apparently has become an obsession which her friends fear will soon drive her to the grave, alongside King Albert, who died in a fall from a rocky eminence in southern Belgium while mountain climbing in February of last year.

The Queen Mother has lost weight steadily in recent months and is down to only 100 pounds. Her rising spirits, which her friends indicate, she has lost the will to live.

Elizabeth will be 59 on July 25, and although normally a healthy, comparatively energetic woman in years past, she has shown her grief alarmingly in the past several months.

TWENTY RESCUED IN MID ATLANTIC

Negroes Drifting Around in Disabled Motor Launch

Palm Beach, Fla., May 11—(AP) —Twenty Bahaman Negroes, drifting on the Atlantic Ocean in a disabled motor launch for two weeks, were rescued early today by the steamship New York, en route from New York to Havana.

The rescue was reported in a message received from the vessel at the radio marine station here. The position given by the New York at the time it picked up the Negroes was about 100 miles north-northeast of Palm Beach.

The captain of the New York said the Negroes were in good condition despite their stay on the launch, the Queen and Crown, the Bahamas.

At the radio station here it was said the coast guard may be asked to take the Negroes from here to Fort Lauderdale, Fla. No definite decision was made on that course, however. The captain in his report to New York said he was proceeding to Havana with the rescued Negroes.

CADETS INSPECTED

Kingston, Ont., May 11—(CP)—Inspection of the Royal Military College Advisory Board were in the city today on their annual visit to the college. This morning the Board inspected the battalion of cadets on parade after which inspection was made of buildings and grounds.

Physical training and gymnastic displays were given by cadets in Fort Frederick. At noon today short memorial service was held at the memorial arch.

Stevens Would Demand 13 Wealthy Canadians Right National Affairs

Claims These Men Control Over Ten Billions or Half of Wealth

FASCISM IS FEARED

Stevens Says They Should Act or Give up Their Interests

Toronto, May 11—(CP)—Thirteen men who control virtually one half of Canada's industrial and commercial wealth should be called into conference with officers of major trusts, banks and insurance companies, and the group should be peremptorily ordered to "shoulder the task of righting Canada," Hon. Harry Hon. H. H. Stevens.

The former Federal Minister of Trade and Finance, in an address to the Association of Accountants and auditors here last night, suggested that as a means of looking after the welfare of the people.

Fascism of Marxism Feared

"If they failed to assume that task within one month," Mr. Stevens said, "I would say to them that the government must assume the control they now have, and do it."

Because he feared capitalists during the past five years, had not evolved a policy beneficial to the people of Canada, the Dominion, Mr. Stevens said, today faced either fascism controlled by force, or the anarchism established by a "destructive revolt" of the people. This ever increasing concentration of wealth among the few, Mr. Stevens declared, was unsound.

Mr. Stevens said he was not actuated by any political motive in his said, controlled $4,000,000,000 of the nation's industrial, banking and commercial wealth, and another held 42 salaried positions with different corporations.

Concentration of Wealth

"It is not a question of whether they are good or bad companies. . . . I am not criticizing these companies. . . . The point is the concentration of all this wealth has been achieved without any conscious policy for the good of the country as a whole," he declared.

He threw out the challenge to the accountants and auditors, the professional men and technical experts to assert themselves in the economic life of this country and put in an economic basis.

"Why don't you get hold of the Lieutenant-Governor's pouring report in this city? There you have the whole story of what is wrong. Where are those men who say leave it to business? Is that return to prosperity by ourselves? Why isn't that supply and demand functioning? Is this city run by the men in control have no conscious policy."

"I'll tell you by way that would be in conference tomorrow," he declared, "and I would put this the on their shoulders. I will leave you alone for a month, is what I would tell them, and then I will see what they were prepared to do.

"Never again will we have such a of the depression," he continued, "unless the Government is justified in stepping in."

Business Changes

Expressing the opinion that the time had come for the profession of accountancy and auditing to be placed on a scientific basis, Mr. (Continued on page eight)

"Incoherent Vaporings of Boy 19" Described of Love Letters by Judge

London, May 11—(AP)—Torrid love letters of Lord Revelstoke, described by the judge as "the most incoherent vaporings of a boy of 19," today created a sensation among society people here interested in the heart balm suit of Angela Joyce, Miss England of 1930.

The full texts of the noblemen's letters to the beautiful-girl were published in the London daily papers.

The letters were splattered with references to kisses and hugs and admissions, "you are driving me crazy."

Norman Birkett, counsel for Lord Revelstoke, now 26 and married, hopes to convince the jury all of the things he wrote in those letters were spoken and written, when he was under 21.

On the other hand, Neville Laski, of the plaintiff's three lawyers, prompted Percy Lord-ship pro-posed marriage to Angela; after she became of age.

Lord Revelstoke wrote, "I love you and love you more and more every second every minute every night."

Another begged:

"Forgive me, if I keep on repeating the same things over and over again, but I love you so much I realize I mean what I say—great big kiss to my adorable Angela with all my heart and soul and love."

"Oh," Lord Revelstoke wrote, "I am so in love with you, almost so terribly in love—I think that it is the right word. I want you to have to part for a short while because the effect of my love and adoration for you is so tremendous".

Another missive declared with alliterative:

"You are the supremist, sublimest, superbest girl in the world. I'll never get over you, no, I'll always adore you." That one ended with a kiss of crosses. No definite sum was mentioned in the suit.

"KEY WEST" TO BE REFLOATED TODAY

3 Coast Guard Boats Salvage Scow And Lighter at Scene

Oswego, N.Y., May 11 (CP)—Crews of three United States coast guard boats, a salvage scow and a lighter today worked against a strong west wind, that kicked up a choppy sea, to get the latter aboard the salvage craft and tow them ashore to free the Canadian steamer Key West from the rocks that trapped the vessel yesterday morning off Main Duck Island in Lake Ontario.

In spite of the handicap, however, the coast guard cutter Forward out of Oswego and the Bache out of Rochester, only such craft on the lake, wirelessed a report to Chief Commander Charles Walker at Buffalo that "it looks good for releasing ship today."

The Forward, the Eagle, and a 30-foot motor-powered lifeboat out of Oswego had been at the scene for more than 30 hours at 10 a.m. today.

The crews of all the boats sought to float the lighter, which was carrying coal, enough to permit her to float free.

The "drunk" was arrested by the Provincial Police in Thurlow, during the gasoline strike today and was given the minimum sentence of seven days, with failure to pay his fine.

The family difficulty reported in the court-house occurred in a Church St. residence just a few minutes prior to the opening of the court. The police were notified and hustled the parties concerned to the "house of justice" where both parties concerned were bound over to keep the peace for the period of one year. The defendant in the case appeared in court looking profusely about the forehead, caused from the result of a blow at the hands of his sister-in-law's husband.

He was born on the old homestead acquired by his grandfather, who owned over 500 acres of land in what is now known as the Caton settlement, about ten miles from the village of Odessa. His parents were John Caton and Margaret Rose, who predeceased him many years ago.

WHEREABOUTS OF PLANES UNKNOWN

Official Secrecy Veils Movement of Huge Air Fleet

Honolulu, May 10—(AP)—Official secrecy veiled in silence today the whereabouts of 46 United States navy seaplanes on a trail-blazing mass flight to Midway Island, 1,323 miles away.

As the hours passed with no information made public by navy officials, speculation grew that the huge air fleet—greatest flying group ever assembled for such a flight—possibly stopped at French Frigate Shoals, 500 miles distant, or at Pearl Harbor and Hermes Reef, 180 miles from Midway.

Rain was falling and a 36-mile wind was blowing at Midway when the airmen began taking off from Pearl Harbor at 7.18 a.m. (12.48 p.m. E.S.T.) Tuesday, lending credence to the belief the planes might have stopped at some intermediate point.

Ten to 12 hours had been estimated as the time necessary for the flight to Midway Island.

The changing positions of the 46 ships as they sped over the trackless Pacific where no other plane ever has ventured, was believed known to forces of the United States navy, now maneuvering in a 5,000,000 square mile triangle of the North Pacific in their 1935 war games.

Somewhere in the triangle bounded by Hawaii, the Mainland and the Aleutian Islands, the 153 ships of the fleet are carrying out training problems.

It was learned the planes will be away from here about one month, giving rise to the belief some of them may continue northward from Midway to the Aleutian Islands, about 1,700 miles farther.

A Word From Zellers To The People of Belleville:

Our new home at 238-240 Front Street will shortly be ready for our occupation. In the meantime, we feel that the folks of Belleville are entitled to know something more than the mere name of a business which hopes soon to enjoy its patronage, and we take this opportunity of telling you something about ourselves and the type of store we will operate.

Zellers Limited is a Canadian Company, incorporated in 1931 under a Dominion Charter, operates in Canada only and is not controlled by or affiliated with any other Canadian or foreign organization.

The President and Founder of the Company, Walter P. Zeller, is a Canadian and a Gentile, whose ancestry in the Province of Ontario dates back over one hundred years. He was born on the farm originally settled by his grandfather in Waterloo County in 1831, and was educated in the public and high schools of Kitchener.

The type of store the Company operates is distinctive in that no attempt is made to carry all the diversified lines of the Department Store nor to confine the price range in the manner of the Price Limit Store. This departure from established practice permits the Company to offer a wide assortment of general merchandise, both fashionable and staple, commonly known as being "Moderately Priced and in Popular Demand".

The Assortment will include Men's and Boys' Furnishings, Ready-to-Wear, Millinery, Accessories, Hosiery, Lingerie and Shoes for Women and Children; Housewares, Smallwares, Piece Goods and Toilet Goods.

The Company's policy is based on the firm belief that its success in Belleville depends entirely on its ability to become an asset to the community.

Splendid progress is being made by Belleville Contractors in the remodelling of the premises we will occupy, and an announcement regarding the opening date will shortly appear in the Ontario Intelligencer.

Lunch was served by the ladies around midnight after which dancing was resumed until the wee hours of the morning.

MOTHER'S DAY

Mother's Day has come again and thoughts on these joyous May days of early spring dwell for a time on the place of The Mother. To the human being there is but one mother, his mother, her mother, millions of mothers though there be. In the great beneficence of God every being has or has had a mother, the mother who guides through the material world, and who points the highest way to her child. In the relationship of mother to child and child to mother there is a motive the like of which is not seen elsewhere. Some few through circumstance or affliction or other cause have been deprived of association with their mothers, but the great body of men and women know what it is to have had mothers.

The cynic may complain of the imperfections of this world, but one of the perfections for which he should give Providence credit is the blessing of life with mother and of the sacrifices which she gladly makes for her child, in infancy, childhood, youth, adult life and even in association with their mothers, but the great body of men and women know what it is to have had mothers.

The cynic may complain of the imperfections of this world, but one of the perfections for which he should give Providence credit is the blessing of life with mother and of the sacrifices which she gladly makes for her child, in infancy, childhood, youth, adult life and even in other cause have been deprived of association with their mothers, but the great body of men and women know what it is to have had mothers.

In the face of this universally acknowledged quality of devotion and sacrifice of mothers, all the failings and shortcomings of life fade into insignificance or join the pean of praise to the mother.

PROGRESS OF RECOVERY

The index number of wholesale prices remained stationary at 72.7 for the week ending May 3. This was 2.1 higher than a year ago. Flour and mill products, rubber and coffee were down. Animal products were buoyant. Live stock, with the exception of bacon hogs, was lower, but fish, dairy and eggs were higher. Nonferrous metals were again active. The price of silver declined during the week but averaged higher than the previous week. Iron and tin and zinc mdg great strength. There were price reductions in window glass but textiles, wood, iron and chemicals were unchanged. Canadian farm products declined from 69.1 to 64.8, there being lower quotations for grains, potatoes, and livestock. Hides and eggs showed strength.

The sale of farm implements and machinery in March amounted in value to $412,199, compared with $293,566 a year ago. The export during the fiscal year ending March aggregated $3,567,252, almost double that of the previous year. The largest export of March was to United Kingdom, $1,000,000, followed by the United States at $118,975; British South Africa, $42,430; Argentina, $20,547; France, $13,450; Germany $6,195; Australia, $5,099; Netherland, $4,500; Chile, $4,241; New Zealand, $3,873; Irish Free State, $3,555 and Italy, $3,000. The largest single item was 410 harvesters and binders valued at $83,323 sent to the United Kingdom.

VALUES OF TOURIST TRAFFIC

Canada's tourist trade exhibited a pleasing vitality last year. What is equally important, all the indications are that the business will be given a still greater impetus during the current year which if one may judge by the appearance of United States automobiles on the city streets and country highways, has "got off to a good start." An estimate made by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics places the total expenditures of tourists in Canada from other countries in 1934 at approximately $131,000,000, and the total expenditures of Canadian tourists in other countries at $61,000,000, the increases being respectively $14,000,000 and $10,000,000, as compared with the preceding year. In both instances, the figures surely are significant of a steady return to normal economic conditions.

Entries from the United States are by far the most important class of tourists, and returns under this head are gratifying. Automobiles which crossed the border for touring purposes last year numbered 3,261,848, compared with 3,096,887 in 1933. Expenditures of tourists who thus came by car are estimated at $85,259,000, compared with $77,250,000 in the preceding twelve months. Tourists who came from the United States by railway and steamship spent approximately $35,000,000, being an increase of about three million dollars over 1933. Visitors arriving via railroad numbered 11,134, or over eighteen hundred more than came to Canada in the preceding year. Their expenditures are placed at $9,455,000, compared with $7,763,000 the year before. Canadian tourists who went abroad via ocean ports numbered 27,619 in 1934 and 27,406 in 1933. The amount they spent in foreign countries is estimated at $14,272,000, compared with $13,982,000 in the previous year. Canadian automobiles exported for touring purposes totaled 113,852, compared with 117,192 the year before. Their total expenditures are said to have been $32,645,000, as against $24,611,000 in 1933.—Montreal Gazette.

THE BEST MEMORY SYSTEM

Forget each kindness that you do as soon as you have done it;
Forget the praise that falls to you the moment you have won it;
Forget the slander that you hear before you can repeat it;
Forget each slight, each spite, each sneer, wherever you may meet it.
Remember every kindness done to you whether in its measure;
Remember praise by others won and pass it on with pleasure;
Remember every promise made and keep it to the letter;
Remember those who lend you aid and be a grateful debtor.
Remember all the happiness that comes your way in living;
Forget each worry and distress, be hopeful and forgiving;
Remember good, remember truth, remember heaven's above you,
And you will find, through age and youth that many hearts will love you.

Extracts From Life at Camp No. 1
Editor Ontario Intelligencer.
Dear Sir:—
A few weeks ago an article appeared in your widely circulated paper concerning camp life on the Faulkner Highway and was sent from a camp within a mile and a half of the line from the camp at which this epistle is written. This letter seems with but as much authority and credit as came the other for all concerned and there are certain elements of every man in the camp known as McDonald's Sifting.
Although situated a little further from the main road than most of the camps we have visited, I think, informed that the camp is quite accessible and that we are in good condition for cars to get to the camp.
The superintendent, Mr. Avey of Bancroft is doing his utmost to make the camp life as pleasant as possible for the men and under his supervision the work is progressing smoothly. As for all are aware of the fact that on all construction camps there is room for improvement and are all too ready to start rebellions of all description if they let them to the four winds, but let me say that we, with the other camps at having the same good intendent that we could have, and this is said in all sincerity.
Living conditions in a locality pervaded the camp are fine. Tag Days are erected outside the Superintendent's office and the flag will be raised during the celebration of the King's Jubilee.
Now a word about the food. The same well known caterers Crawley and McCracken cater to the camps as they do to those in all and it is a pleasure to walk into their kitchens and dining rooms which are at all times spic and span and see the crowds just how things are done. The kitchen is under the supervision of Mr. Sam Keith of Sudbury who has been in charge at the ply of Crawley and McCracken for about fifteen years. Any person can show the ability of the man himself and I am sure that anyone wishing to pay a visit to the kitchen will be met with all courtesy by Mr. Keith. Everything is kept in order and there is nothing they would like better than to have you or I pay them a call at any time. Visitors have been scarce since the project started possibly because they think that the camp is non-accessible, but in any way such belief is quite so.
On Tuesday last the number of men were cut down considerably for reasons unknown and many were indeed sorry that such was the case but no doubt this was unavoidable and things will soon again come to take a turn for the better in the near future.
Now sir, as regards recreation, I must say this is where we lack. A school is conducted at the camps of the week and/is open for all to attend who wish. This is carried on very capably by Mr. Edwin Pennell of the Frontier College, Toronto, and he has his hands full and does this work for the good of the men. This needs a considerable amount of patience on the part of the teacher, but I must say that much good is being derived from this phase of our programme and Mr. Pennell deserves much credit for the good work that he is doing.
The Committee is also trying to get place where the men are given credit for the necessary things and by the end of the month it is decided from their cheques. This is under the direction of Mr. Morris Monorief for Barrie who is well experienced in this work.
Before I finish let me take this opportunity of asking some kind friend to send the men a couple of ball games and a ball for the ball, but some that have been used would do fine and I am sure you will hear from the men. They each will be greciated by all. Thanking you in advance for the space this will take in your valuable paper I am,
Sincerely yours,
A Subscriber in Camp.

ENDEAVOR TO MAKE MOST OF YOUR ABILITY

Develop Yourself And Your Opportunities to The Utmost

It is very rare to find a person who is satisfied with his own lot in life. Everywhere you turn, almost everybody wants to be something or somebody else.

You hear of business men—and successful ones too—who want to be professional men. Or vice versa. Men are likely to express a desire to go into politics.

For example, physicians want to be writers. They have a very genuine literary ambition, they wish they had gone in for surgery; the surgeons, also desiring something else, turn longing eyes upward other specialties. They run the day they first entered medical school.

Women complain and are dissatisfied with their jobs. They employer thinking he'd be lucky if he were an professional nurse. Of course, the employee almost always thinks it would be wonderful to be an employer.

But when we feel that way do we ever stop to think that probably we wouldn't be any happier if we were somebody else than we are right now?

Thinking how nice it must feel to be somebody else is usually a sign of inferiority complex. Contemplating the lot of others, we fail to see the disadvantages and desirable attributes. Seldom, if ever, do we take the disagreeable features into account.

Yet every station and occupation in life has its disadvantages. No one can be overemphasize our disadvantages and underemphasize our advantages that we look upon the procession that passes with longing eyes.

Be careful not to let life fool you that way. Be sufficiently self-analytical to try to develop yourself and your opportunities to the utmost.

Lead your life in such a way that others will want, to be you instead of you wanting to be them. Don't waste time making longing eyes! Don't be resentful! Don't sigh! Don't be jealous!

Make the most of what you really are.

The date for the production of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Trial by Jury" has been fixed for May 22nd. in the Queen's Opera House. The Daisy Lyric Club numbers about 125 voices, counting the two divisions, and was never in better shape. This will certainly be the best amateur event held here for years. The entertainment will be in aid of the Belleville Institute. The "Trial by Jury" will be preceded by a pretty musical sketch, "A Trip to Europe" by the Junior Daisy Lyric Club.

The result of the fight with the rebels in the vicinity of Batoche's Crossing was not as decisive as was at first reported. The enemy after a stubborn resistance were driven into their stronghold, from which General Middleton is reported as saying, it would only too many lives to dislodge them by a direct attack. Accordingly the effect of artillery fire will be tried and if that should not prove sufficient, an effort will be made to starve out the rebels.

A despatch from Washington announces that Mr. John M. Strong of New York, has been appointed United States Consul for Belleville district. We regret very much that Col. Price was not reappointed. He has filled the position most satisfactorily as has been shown by the petition to that effect from the leading business and professional men in the city. We will part with our esteemed friend, Col. Price with much regret.

Letters to the Editor

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Sir:—Many of us motorists of us highway workers on going out are asked at home "How do you put in the time? "It must be lonesome and monotonous." We are all happy to answer that we never have an opportunity to become lonesome.

The good people of the district around camps always extend to all the men a cordial welcome to all local entertainments, socials, parties, as well as to Sunday School and church.

On Monday evening May 8th, we were all invited to a local talent concert at Greenwood school house under the auspices of the Young People's Society. A number of us took advantage of the invitation and had a very enjoyable evening. We learned to the agreeable surprise of some that there is no occasion to send outside for talent, musical or otherwise, it would be very difficult to single out any particular one of our entertainers for special mention as they all did so exceedingly well in their respective parts. We cannot refrain however, from personally extending our hearty thanks to Miss Pearl Phillips as we are advised that it was due to her untiring efforts that the concert was such a success. Little Miss Gladys McCormack showed wonderful ability as an actress in her difficult and amusing character part as maid in the doctor's home in the pretty little sketch they put on, while all the other performers were well trained and entertaining. We all had a good time and came home happy.

The next entertainment to which we are invited is a "Sausage and Pancake" social at St. Ola, Friday evening, May 17. Now we are sure to have a good time but please do not tell the entertainment committee that sausages are our main diet on our daily C. and I. subscription, in fact they have become our regular diet. Don't complain!

If this glorious weather holds out it will be long range that we will be receiving invitations to strawberry socials.

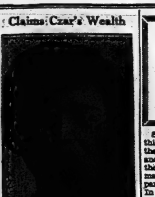
ACCEPTS CALL TO NEWBURGH



Rev. E. F. Swayne Shortly to Leave Consecon Circuit

Carrying Place.—The celebration of the Silver Jubilee of accession to the throne has come and gone, and in this community as in a hundred thousand others loyal hearts were stirred by the King's simple yet forceful message to his people. Many went from here to attend the celebration in Trenton, a few went to points as distant as Belleville and Picton, and some took advantage of the occasion to visit friends at distant points. Re-soldiers from the community were included in the parade in Trenton and even a few of the school children joined the procession.

Sunday services in the United Church took the form of a Mother's Day celebration, held one week in advance of Mother's Day, owing to the fact that the minister, Rev. E. F. Swayne of Consecon, cannot be present here next week. Special music for the occasion had been selected and special practices of the Sunday School children had been held, so all were pleased when an unusually large congregation were present. Appropriate Mother's Day readings and recitations were given by Miss Lela Black and Miss Nora and Mr. Leroy Hennessy. Rev. E. Swayne delivered a fine address relating to the proper observance of the occasion which was much appreciated. At the conclusion of his sermon he surprised and grieved the hearers when he announced that he had accepted a call to Newburgh, and that his resignation from this circuit to take place some time soon. Mr. Swayne has been a popular pastor with a special appeal for the young people, and he will be greatly missed.

When the skipper of the Wolfed-owned tug "John S. Shovel" arrived last Sunday at the east end of the Murray Canal and found it closed with all the bridges-tenders off duty he emitted a snort of disgust and began a discourse suited to the occasion. Unfortunately the metal is not open to navigation on Sundays until the months of June; and when a boat does come before that time, her skipper is compelled to lay the costs of bridge-waiting in addition to the usual fee. But the gentleman was quite frank about the whole affair. He and his boat had to wait while the superintendent of the canal, Lt.-Col. Saves located and brought to the scene the various bridge-tenders, one of them from a distance of twelve miles, and he did not like it. When the matter of costs was brought up he positively refused to pay any fees and then caused another long delay while telephone calls to Mr. Weddell in Trenton made it for the occasion had been selected and special practices of the Sunday School children had been held, so all were pleased when an unusually large congregation were present. on Thursday evening was preceded by a heavy downfall of rain and only a fair crowd was in attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. Ewart Hennessy and baby are now guests of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Hennessy, on Monday last.

Softball plans are in the air, and there is a possibility that Carrying Place will be represented in the Trenton loop this year. The organization meeting was held on Tuesday evening and the enthusiastic representative from this community attended a meeting was held in favor of a local team if they wish to enter. The first game of the schedule is only two weeks away. Meanwhile the loop previously flourishing in Ameliasburg Township seems to have come to dissolution. Rednersville, twice league champs, have entered the Belleville city loop; Consecon are going to drop softball for a baseball team to be entered in the county league and this leaves the other centres either at a loss for the drawing cards of the game are gone. It is rumoured that a meeting to discuss softball was held in Consecon on Tuesday evening.

The family from Trenton have moved into the George Brown house on the corner opposite the post office.

A petition requesting the Provincial Government to set aside the road from Brighton along the bay and past Murray's Bay to Colborne has been circulated locally on Wednesday and widely signed. The idea is to get the road taken over as a part of the scenic highway or else to have it made a county road. The movement seems well founded as this road is becoming increasingly important especially in summer.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Norrington spent Sunday of the week-end in Picton.

Sunday last was Arbor Day in the schools in Ontario, and locally at least, it proved a most appropriate one. During the forenoon the cloudy cold weather delayed the task of planting trees but when the work was done inside, Windows were tastefully decorated with paper and flowers were placed in pots along the window-sills. During the day trees, raked and cultivated into flats of stone and then erected a wire-net backing for the bush effect against. The shelfines were covered with sawdust and the ground around the base of the stumps o'clock snow began to fall and the previously made plans of a picnic in the Twelve O'Clock Woods were abandoned. On Monday afternoon, however, the pupils proceeded to the Point to begin what they had been forced to leave on Friday and lofty adventures are spent. A rousing game of softball requires better than an hour's time and then a program of games and races, and later all adjourned to the beach where around a fire they drew large cartons of weiners were disposed of. Prizes for races were awarded as follows:

Older Boys—John Buchanan.
Intermediate Boys—Arnold Perrow.
Younger Boys—Austin Clarke.
Older Girls—Noreen Wood.
Intermediate Girls—Jessie Weller.
Younger Girls—Phyllis Wood.
Boys' Three-Legged Race—Allan Bird and Raymond Clarke.

Boot-and-Shoe Race — William Perrow.
Caterpillar Race—George La Tour.
Relay Race—John Buchanan and William Perrow.
Coal Race—Joseph Perrow.
Wheelbarrow Race—John Buchanan and William Perrow.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry La Tour plan a trip to Cornwall at the end of this week.

Miss Alice Sparby of Hamilton has arrived to spend a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Alec Ompbell and family.

Mr. Ross Hennessy is employed in Trenton at present.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hardy Sr. of Toronto, spent the holidays with Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Dempsey at Albury, and visited their place here during their stay.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Dymond and Mary and Mrs. Isaac Morgan and Miss Lois Moyniss spent the week-end in Toronto with friends.

Sunday is Mother's Day, about this shrine, whether the object of the honour be dead or living. Men and women, boys and girls, will pay their tribute. In a world torn by many sorrows and griefs love is a pervasive remedy as a steadying force. In the tribute to "Mother" the world at a time will forget the blatant discords of the economic and social system. It will listen to tender voice which guides them into ways of nobility and service.

The man who has been on relief can turn from the worries of his present condition to meditate upon the life of her who gave him birth, whose tender hands he recalls whether she be on this or that side of the veil and can see in her the symbol of the love which bears the forces which make for what is best while in life.

The family is the secret of life; it is the basis of all that is worth while national relations through a divine impulse motherhood is made the agency of the most beautiful ideals. In it is bound up the glory of life with its infinite possibilities. Children who do not pay due respect to their mother may break the precious bond but those who keep true to their very beings that lack of goodness in the finer texture of character.

The fact that mothers are not only careful of their children's physical welfare but give unending thought to the moral and spiritual bringing and sacrifice themselves to the greatest in life, that of preparing young life to bear its share of the burdens so soon to fall upon its shoulders, is a thing that in life of nature and providence the mother is destined to play the supreme part. About mothers linger the treasured thoughts of life, thoughts and inspirations which spur men and women to highest achievement whether their lives have been true or wide, therefore, it is well that for one day in the year humanity stops to pay its tribute—not to the symbolic mother but to the individual mother who is the real and only symbol, who is the life and the light beyond the symbol of love and devotion.

The world has become awakened to the importance of a mother's work and the holiness of her task. The wisdom, power and love of the Creator is nowhere more apparent, than in the mother and her love for all children wherewith He has endowed mothers. Was there ever love so pure, so unselfish, so tenderly solicitous, so nearly approaching the divine as that in the case of the mother, with her child? Is there any love under Heaven more complete, more far-seeing, more enduring, more faithful than that of a mother?

I believe it is the mothers of men that help to make Providence has committed the supreme task of keeping alive by example more than by precept, the sense of the spiritual; unselfish love of Him who made, redeems and keeps us all.

Mothers of today, your child is a sacred volume of blank paper on whose pages are to be written the record of your own life. Be careful then what you write, for be written there for the world will read it. There in untold bitterness in the realization that our thoughtfulness our appreciation of our mother often comes all too late. Men and women, surely over the kindness we never did, the kind words we never spoke. I shall never forget a New York city whose name was "Charley", became separated from his mother, and was picked up by a police officer. He was crying as the officer took him to his station. The officer learned where he lived, and one officer told him he would take him home when he went off duty at twelve o'clock. He was taken to the sergeant's office and told to lie down on the couch. He went over to it but soon came back and stood in front of the sergeant's desk. "Go and lie down, boy; boy, it's all right." He went back but by and by he came back and the officer said, "Why, what is the matter with you?" The little fellow said, "Would you mind, sir, if I said my prayers as I do at home" The officer did not mind. This was a little new to this man. The little fellow knelt down by the couch, with his little face upturned to Heaven, and said: "Now I lay me down to sleep."

The latter prayer was ended, little Charley jumped upon the couch and was happy and content. It was then that the station, the officer took off their hats and bowed their heads while tears trickled down their cheeks. Oh, the joy that must come to a Christian mother's heart when she sees her children have accepted their mother's God.

The writer of these words was never forget, though now passed the three-score years and ten, his child-hood days and the evening hour of bed-time when mother would take us by the hand and lead us to her bedside. There, kneeling, she taught us our child's simple prayer, and now, after, so many years have passed and gone, the memory of those childhood days remain a sweet memory to me, and now, at this late hour, that prayer has winged its way to the heart of God. I cannot close my eyes in sleep, until I, like a child, prayed that child's evening prayer I learned at mother's knee.

There is an enduring tenderness for the love of mother to her children that transcends all other affections of the heart. No love like mother's love ever dwells within the bosom of the Giver of Life who thus has implanted her love in the heart of every good woman.

Henry Grady, orator and editor, who died in the fame and while the world was applauding his eloquence, said: "I would rather hear one word mother's home, "Mother," he said, "I will be with you in life by and night. I want to sit by your side with my head on your knee and feel your hand on my head as you used to do. Now, mother, get out the little trundle bed and after I have knelt at your knee and said 'Now I lay me down to sleep' put me there in the bed and tell me that little bed and say a prayer with your eyes as you used to do."

In conclusion may I add these words:

Dark hills of Heaven yet,
They are not dark to me, but lampe.
That wailing "mothers" set
On the hills of Heaven for me.

That we may not forget.

Girls With Bare Legs, Painted Lips Are Banned

Dudley, Worcestershire, England, May 7 (AP)—Girls with bare legs and painted lips were banned from the parish church at Dudley near here today by the rector of the vicar, The Rev Harold Marley.

The pastor warned his feminine parishioners he would not only eject them from the church but would be neglected to don their neatest hat he would also refuse to administer the sacrament to girls with carmined lips.

I consider the girl who thrusts her unclothing flesh before the attention—frequently the gaze also attention, because of the nearness in the pew—of the male sex, is doing a dastardly trick.

"The male mind, being what it is, is bound to be diverted. If it be said, "Well, I don't think much on the male mind." My answer would be, "It is as it was made."

"Woman was given those fair limbs to attract men, but only for that she might help him through life and not hinder him."

Library Corner

"Mitch Loved Books" by James O'Donnell Bennett has appeared in serial form in the Chicago Tribune under the title of "Best Sellers of the Ages" with the intention of emphasizing the "deathless news value of great books". The articles were well worth preserving in book form, but a perusal of the contents leaves one with the impression that they serve a greater purpose than that of stimulating one to read the great classics of the world.

The book begins with a foreword in each chapter dealing grith one book or author and concludes with a short list of titles the choice is not particularly catholic but represents the author's personal preference. The Holy Bible in the opening chapter is followed by Homer, the Thousand and One Arabian Nights and the Canterbury Tales to Plutarche Lives. Lovers of the classics will relish the bits of anecdotal biography, quotations and comments which only well known writers on each particular book. We doubt very much if it will have the effect of leading this field is limited can peep into this volume without being interested and in many instances delighted with the evidence of the various writers—no matter how well read—as to sources.

Interest in the British-Israel Federation of Canada has prompted us to anyone wishing to learn more about the movement to secure and read a able form in either of these volumes, of which, probably, the Empire is British Israel" by Bruce.

In "Oliver Cromwell," John Buchan, the recently appointed Governor-General of Canada, has given us a vivid and glowing panorama of England during the civil war. It is like a picture of the Puritan and the limited biography of Cromwell though it has little of the glitter of the great detail. The book presents little new light or revolutionary theories but is a solution the light is a painstaking history compiled from well known and well proven sources. Unlike them, it avoids the prejudices and bias of the earlier writers and is well proven.

Those of you whose knowledge of the Puritan Oliver Cromwell derives from school histories will be surprised to learn that the stern and tear-faced Puritan you had expected but rather a hearty fellow of rough clothes and rough and not always sparing a few horses when they were needed for the cause of liberty short of funds.

The modern rise of a man to be virtually dictator of England after some, forty years of quiet and unprofitable life as a country farmer, makes interesting and, in places even exciting reading particularly the descriptions of battle scenes where the parliament forces were successful against great odds. Anyone wishing an authentic history of the life and times of Oliver Cromwell this volume can well be recommended.—J. A. D.

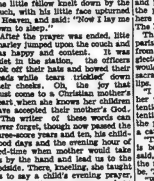
RED CROSS SOCIETY CARES FOR PIONEERS OF TODAY



His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, is a recent public speaker, who has given radio broadcasting appeal on behalf of the Red Cross Outpost Hospital Service in Northern Ontario.

"We are all apt to forget that there are pioneers today in this Province, "Men and women and children in Northern Ontario are still living lives of hardship and difficulty — the same hardships and the same difficulties as those endured by the pioneers of old who have been so often praised in speech and song.

"It is the easiest thing in the world to sit back and forget them and forget the pioneers of today; to be moved to sympathetic and fruitful sympathy by stories of the sufferings of those pioneers long dead and gone, but forget those who are living". Dr. Bruce declared. "It is pleasant to think of those to them who founded the cities of today, and to render no service whatever to those who now are founding the cities of the future—great cities that will grow up in the hinterlands of Northern Ontario".

"It is the duty of the Red Cross Canadian Red Cross, let it be said as forcefully as possible that they have proved their claim to fellow-citizens of ours—the pioneers of the Province of Ontario. Bruce. The Cross has removed from the hearts of innumerable little communities the haunting fear that if trouble befalls, aid in the wilderness—that hamstrung by distance, they must suffer calamities or accident, with no one within reach, humanly speaking, to render prompt, efficient aid.

"After all, the poetic beauties of life in the north of Northland do nothing to overcome the prosaic fact that the Red Cross must, far from the great hospitals of the cities," the Lieutenant-Governor stated. "The Canadian Red Cross, year after year, patiently carries on its plans the message of the practical good wishes and the efficient medical aid of the Red Cross—a practically attached fellow-citizens wish to extend to them. It is the practical aid to them that we refused to help them. There are still communities in Northern Ontario that are the future will be the portion of the finest in the world, with no hope of medical assistance. It is to these that the Red Cross is most helpful.

The full scope and significance of this great international organization is not, however, fully appreciated until one realizes that its ramifications extend far beyond the confines of the Province. It is the uttermost part of the world," said Dr. Bruce. "Sixteen years after the War, the Red Cross is one of the world's great agencies for peace and goodwill among all nations."

"May the Red Cross be enabled always to be in action the high mark of service for which it stands" concluded His Honour, "and may these kindly deeds help reign in the counsels of nations."

MOTHER'S LOVE

Can a woman forget her child, that she should not have compassion. Isaiah 49:15.

When Mary stood at Jesus' cross
With breaking heart—mournful eyed,
With anguished head—A mother's love
Was born and all the world defied.

This love, then born, comes down the ages
This love't of Heaven, not of earth,
Each mother's heart is but a font
Of love o'erflowing, Heavenly birth.

THE DRAMA

"Making Mother Modern" Presented By Tabernacle Mission Circle

Efforts of her ultra-modern daughters to rejuvenate an old-fashioned mother made an amusing comedy in Tabernacle Church parlours last evening when members of the Mission Circle presented "Making Mother Modern", before a large and interesting audience. The play which was produced by Mrs. I. S. Naylor and Mrs. Clifford Bailey was splendidly done.

The action of the play takes place in the living room of Mrs. Martin's home and the walls of her very comfortable home re-echoed to amazing and bitter struggles. Mrs. Martin (Mrs. A. Kitchen), had come to the time in her life when she wished to relax but her four talented daughters anxious to make friends in society felt that their mother was a social set back to them. Lillian (Lou Dougherty) was by far the most persistent and unpleasant. Dora, Laura Dougherty), decided that her mother should diet and exercise more, she herself being slightly minded. Ella, the librarian, (Hollin Bird), sought to improve her mother intellectually, while Mabel, (Elzbi Horton), following a career in medicine, deciding that her mother, too, should have a career and learn china painting.

In spite of her vigorous protest, mother was forced to adopt the plans and friends of her daughter. Her own friend, Mrs. Sloane, (Thelma Hodges), was unconsciously unheaved out by her daughters. The president of the political club (Mae Mincemoon), the representative of the dramatic society, (Mabel Bray), and the Reading Club president, (Myra Irvine), and even a dancing teacher, (Audrey Burgess), tried to do their bit in the modernizing of mother, who became hopelessly confused and discouraged a'every turn. The climax of it all was a bridge party at which the guests were Ruby Moore, Emma Dafoe, and Dorothea Newson, with the maid, (Mrs. J. Brown), being the final ruination of the social aspirations of the Martin girls.

Mrs. Martin is brought to her senses by the good advice of her neighbours taken by Thelma Hodges and Marjorie Austin and by the timely arrival of her sister, (Rachel Fox), whom no one can intimidate or change. Unfortunately for Amanda's friendliness had annoyed Dora's haughty friend, (Grace Day). Much to the chagrin of the daughters and as predicted by a beautiful gypsy fortune teller, (Mrs. Bailey), the social leader (Mae Edmonton), arrives to call on the opportune time with Aunt Amanda present, but to their considerable confusion the prominent club woman turns out to be an old friend of Aunt Amanda and a firm advocate of the "homely" type of woman as represented by mother Martin.

The parts in the play were all pre-studied with splendid effect by the actresses, especially Mrs. Kitchen who had a very difficult part to sustain. The attractive stage setting and the charming gowns of the players added much to the interest of the play.

Between acts Miss Dorothea Newson contributed vocal solos and Mrs. George Wright delighted the audience with a group of piano numbers. At the conclusion of the program the members of the Mission Circle expressed their appreciation of the efforts of their efficient directors by presenting them with bouquets of roses.

JOYCE MEETS NADINE

CHAPTER NINE

The woman gave a sharp little cry of pain and stood drooping against the chain. Joyce had risen and was supporting her.

The men at the end of the car had turned around. One of them waved quickly up the swaying aisle of the train.

"What's the matter, Nadine? What did you do?"

"I wrenched my ankle. Oh . . . it hurts so!"

She had slumped into Joyce's chair now and was tenderly rubbing her ankle. She rolled large dark eyes to the anxious face of the watching girl. "I fell on you, I know I didn't hurt you? It was such a stupid thing to do," she tried to smile bravely as she said it.

"You didn't hurt me," Joyce answered. "I'm so sorry you hurt yourself."

"It was such a clumsy thing to do. I should be more careful." The lady rose, leaning heavily on the chair. Took a faltering little step and collapsed with a moan. "Oh, it's so sore!"

"Better not walk on it for a few minutes," advised the man. "Shall I bandage it?"

"No, I'm sure it will be all right, Leo. You know how I am always turning my ankle. I wrenched it badly once—" she turned in friendly fashion to Joyce. "Once you're down that you know the ankle always weak—"

The second man had joined them and to his question the woman replied brightly "No need, Jeff. I'll be all right, Jeff. Don't let this interrupt your talk. Why don't you and Leo go out on the platform and smoke. I'm sit here for a minute or two and rest it."

When they complied, she spoke confidentially to Joyce, "I'm a woman's always in the way when two men want to talk business, don't you? And I'm so afraid I did an idiotic stupid thing."

"That is liable to happen to anyone," Joyce answered slightly at a loss.

"It was really my own fault," said the woman with a winning air of frankness. "Look——" she held out a slim black suede foot. "No one but a fool would ever go travelling with spike heels like that! But it was such a short trip. Just a couple of days you know."

While she chattered, she rubbed the injured ankle.

A fascinating woman. Despite an almost painful thinness she apparently irked a certain prettiness. Joyce's inborn clothes sense told her that the trim black crepe dress, the sensible slippers, the tight fell hat which fitted her head like a helmet, had cost a pretty penny. There was two distinct dinner rings on her long white hands and three bands of ouyx and chip diamonds clasped one thin wrist. A fain provocative perfume breathed from her, subtly proclaiming that it never cost less than $50 an ounce.

Her face was a while oval, nervously animated. The large black eyes were emphasized skilfully by mascara and her lips were delicately tinted a smart orange.

Altogether a sparkling, modish, sort of person Joyce found herself listening to with fascinating friendliness.

By the end of a half hour they had reached a surprising degree of mutual knowledge.

Joyce had learned that her companion was Mrs. Carewe—Nadine Carewe. Nadine —it fitted the slim dark beauty—and her Joyce thought. But the stout blonde wife of the man who had come running at the time of the accident, was not Mr. Carewe's. Mrs. Carewe appeared was different.

"It was a big mistake," Nadine Carewe explained with winning frankness. "I was only a child and was very unhappy . . . " The long lashes fluttered down for a moment against the white cheeks.

The stout blonde was Mr. Leonard Bates, Mrs. Carewe's fiance it appeared.

And while she seemed to do all the talking, giving information in straightforward manner, Mrs. Carewe learned Joyce's name. She found that the girl was going to the city to find work. Knew that she was friendless—and homeless.

When the train returned from the platform, it was to find the two woman in animated conversation.

Mrs. Carewe introduced them.

Mrs. Baldwin—the Flapper. Fair, fat and 40. Light hair getting thin on top—and this, combined with a broad face, made Joyce think of nothing so much as a very clean and solemn baby.

Mr. Thorrulf—Mrs. Carewe called him "Jeff"—Nothing of the blonde baby here. Power in that heavy jaw —in the bold black eyes.

His spoke little—Jeff Thorrulf. His eyes clung to the girl while they talked. He seemed to be drinking her in, missing nothing of the creamy oval of her face, the strange violet eyes. She eyes fringed on her mouth.

There is something magnetic about sunh vivid beauty as Joyce possessed. It draws and dismays as the magnet draws steel. It may have been only chance that Jeff Thorrulf was the man to help Joyce that night Joyce left Riverton. But it is likely that Jeff Thorrulf, in all would most assuredly have been some one.

Had Maddy run away in Joyce's place—Maddy, with her sandy hair and sallow face—Jeff Thorrulf would have continued his conversation with Mrs. Carewe when she entered the Observation car.

But it was not Maddy. It was Joyce, with her vivid radiance of youth and beauty. And Jeff Thorrulf forgetting his fat wife, stared at her with brooding eyes.

When at length they rose to go to their berths it was Len Bates who steadied Joyce against the jolting of the train.

Mrs. Carewe was behind them, leaning heavily on Jeff Thorrulf's arm. Her black eyes were faintly mocking.

"You'll have your work cut out with that girl, Jeff," she said softly. "She's nobody's fool."

The man's heavy lip came out pugnaciously. His eyes were fastened on the slender back of the girl just ahead of them. A queer look came into the black eyes. They shifted to meet the cynical gaze of the woman.

"Listen Nadine," he said shortly and went on with a laugh at length.

MRS. CAREWE'S INVITATION

CHAPTER TEN

Up to now, the incident of meeting Mrs. Carewe and her companions had kept Joyce from her own somber thoughts. Everything was part of a strange dream through which the girl found herself speaking and acting with the apparent volition of her own.

But as the train had resented the intrusion of these agreeable strangers. There was much to be done before Joyce could be alone with her thoughts about.

Where she would go in the city? What she would do to find work? And, first of all, food. She was faint.

Lying in her berth, feeling the unfamiliar lilting of the train beneath her, Joyce stared into the dark with hot, dry eyes.

She had its way with her. She was shaken with miserable doubts and fears. Her courage had evaporated.

Then moments—when she wanted to set about trying that it was a dream—when she wanted to find herself in her own bed, safe and cozy in the shadowy circle of Rita's tray, life of Riverton.

Joyce dug her nails into her dry palms and tried to realize what she had done.

She had left separated yesterday from this night. Was it only last night that she had sat in the shadows and felt her heart break at the sight of Natalie Cameron in Norman Ainslie's arms? Only last night that she had stood in the dining room of the Riverton House and talking to old Roger Cameron? Only yesterday she had been in her thoughts. Just as she had heard it whistle so many times down by the Riverton railway sheds.

A frightening sense of unreality held the girl fast. From the thought of Norman could only bring a dull resentment, nothing like the sharp misery she had known back in home. That was because so many new impressions were crowding in upon her, a logical voice within explained wearily. Because it was they called it—a counter irritant.

She had sprung in her shabby bedroom in the Commercial House the thought of Norman would still have the power to hurt her.

He had been right—that wily old Roger Cameron, when he told her to leave Riverton.

She saw the sun flat fields, interested by truck gardens, sliding by in the early light.

Joyce pulled herself as best she could in unaccustomed restraint of the berth and went to the dressing room.

The woman were already there. A fat woman struggling painfully into an unconfortable Jersey dress, and before the glass a tall lean lady wrapped in a plum colored silk robe —Nadine Carewe.

Nadine had bound a white towel about the edge of her hair and was vigorously rubbing on cold cream.

The brilliant dark eyes came up and reflected in the mirror to meet the girl's as she entered.

Nadine seemed surprised at the relief she felt to see a friendly smile. Her heart was very sore and

"Just a country dumb bell, in spite of that mysterious look to her eyes and that certain air of reserve" . . . Nadine's thoughts trailed off incoherently. "Why in the world Jeff Thorrulf with all his experience in sophisticated, slays me!"

But Nadine's voice was sweet and low. "Perhaps I can help you. What sort of work are you looking for?" she asked with a friendly interest.

"If you wish me to, I'll see Madame Estelle—get most of my things from her. She always wants a good model. I'll tell you—between ourselves a pretty burst of enthusiasm, "you come on up to my apartment when we get in and I'll have the maid get us some breakfast. But cannot seem to make a success in life.
She tells of feeling always tired.
She cannot develop the energy and pep
Which is required to make her work satisfactory.
By noon her energy is spent
And during the afternoon efficiency is at low ebb,
Because she is tired, drowsy and listless.
Worrying for fear of losing her position,
She writes to ask why she does not succeed.
It is no doubt a matter of health.
There appears to be a decided lack of nerve force.
Mind and body are overcome with fatigue.

Digestion is impaired and the blood is impoverished.
This case clearly calls for Dr. Chase's Nerve Food
To increase the blood rich and restore the nerve force.
A few weeks use of this restorative treatment
Will bring back energy and pep to mind and body
And give you the new hope and confidence
Which makes for success and happiness in life.

NEW OPERA HEAD SUDDENLY DIES

Herbert Witherspoon of "Met" Drops Dead in Office

New York, May 11—(UP)—Herbert Witherspoon, newly appointed director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, dropped dead late Friday while chatting with associates in his office. Death was due to coronary thrombosis.

Witherspoon, 61 years old, was to have sailed for Europe Saturday with his wife, presumably in search of talent for the first "Met" season under his direction.

He slumped to the floor while discussing the trip and the new season with Edward Zeigler, assistant general manager and Earl Lewis, treasurer.

Zeigler mentioned that subscriptions for the coming season were far greater than had been expected. Witherspoon smiled.

"Well, that's grand," he said, and fell to the floor, dead.

The singer-director—who did basso roles himself at the Metropolitan from 1908 to 1914—returned to the famous "Diamond Horseshoe" early in March of this year to succeed Giulio Gatti-Casazza as general director.

Witherspoon was married three times. His present wife is the former Mrs. Blanche Skeath. They were married little more than a year ago.

His first marriage was to Greta Hughes, sister of Rupert Hughes, the author. They were divorced in 1918. Florence Hinkle, noted concert singer his second wife died in 1933.

Witherspoon assumed the almost dictatorial post of Gatti Casazza, from which the Italian director resigned after 27 years of service. Introduction of opera at popular prices was one of Witherspoon's aims.

He was president of the Chicago Musical College from 1925 to 1929, director of the Chicago Civic Opera from 1921 and 1931 and director of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music from 1923 to 1925.

"Good Enough Company,"

— said Mr. PICOBAC.

The genial philosopher of Sunny Southern Ontario slapped three cards down on the table.

"A pack of cards and a pipe of Picobac is good enough company for me", declared he.

"They call this game 'Solitaire'," continued Mr. Picobac. "But once I get my pipe of Picobac going there's nothing solitary about it. I feel I have friends all around me."

Mr. Picobac paused to enjoy the fragrant flavour of his favourite tobacco, and then went on in characteristic vein:

"Yes, sir, Picobac is certainly a friendly tobacco. I tell you there is a Burley quality and flavour to Picobac that keeps a man happy and sociable wherever he is. You can't get away from it — Picobac is a mild . . . cool . . . sweet smoke. And you can roll good cigarettes with it, too."

SCOUT NEWS

A Scout is a friend to all, and a brother to every other Scout—4th Scout Law. Again we say welcome to Baden-Powell on his arrival in Toronto today. About 80 Boy Scouts and Girl Guides have gone from Belleville to meet the Chief Scout of the world. May he be spared many more years to carry on the great work he started 27 years ago.

Talks on Character

The following is an extract from "Aids to Scoutmastership" by Lord Baden-Powell, Chief Scout of the World.

"A Nation owes its success, not so much to its strength in armaments as to the amount of character in its citizens."

So character is of first value whether for a nation o fo the individual.

Erudition—that is, reading, writing and arithmetic—is taught in the schools; but where is the more important quality, character, taught? Nowhere in particular. There is no subjected training for children in character. Yet, if it is going to make a man's career for him, it ought to be developed in him before he starts out; while he is still a boy and receptive. Character cannot be drilled into a boy. The germ of it is already in him, and needs to be drawn out and expanded. How?

Character is very generally the result of environment or surroundings. For example, take two small boys, twins if you like. Teach them the same lessons in school but give them entirely different surroundings, companions, and homes outside the school. Put one under a lively, encouraging mother, among clean and straight playfellows, where he is trusted on his honour to carry out rules of life and so on. On the other hand, take the second boy and let him loaf in the streets with a filthy home, among foul-mouthed, thieving, discontented companions; he likely to grow up vith...the same amount of character as his twin?

There are thousands of boys being wasted daily to our country through being left to become characteriless, and, therefore useless wasters, a misery to themselves and an eyesore and a danger to the nation.

They could be saved if only the right surroundings or environment were given to them at its receptive time of their lives. And there are many thousands of others who may not be placed on quite as low a level (for there are wasters in every class of life), but who would be all the better men and more valuable to the country and more satisfactory to themselves if they could be persuaded, at the right age to develop their characters.

Here then, lies the most important aim in the Boy Scout training. Non-sectarian, not to indirect, mind you, but to educate, that is, so draw out the boy to learn for himself of his own desire, the things that tend to build up character in him.

Walter Parnell Gyroffy Earning Right to Meet Badman Dunlop in Return Bout

Fistic Attack Follows Awarding Bout to Gyroffy

PETROFF SMART

Slevick And George Put on Swell 30 Minute Preliminary

When Walter Parnell was disqualified in the main bout of last night's Kiwanis charity wrestling card at the arena, Johnnie Gyroffy, the favorite of local grappling fans, was awarded the bout and the right to meet Al Dunlop in a special return bout next week. Gyroffy had won the initial fall of the main bout, Parnell taking the second fall when the latter entered upon a pugnacious fistic attack upon Gyroffy in the last round and was disqualified by Referee Bert Wells.

The bout was the roughest ever seen in a local ring and ended in a free-for-all fistic melee that had the fans enter the ring and separate the contestants as Gyroffy retaliated Parnell's vicious attack. Before the bout had been awarded to him. The semi-final bout of the evening proved just as interesting to the 400 fans present as Dan Petroff of Brighton, over Chris Findlay, the Detroit bedman in a 45-minute limit affair. Originally this bout had been set for one fall nature, but Findlay objected so strenuously to the fact that Kiwanis Club officials persuaded Petroff to return to the ring and make the bout a two out of three affair. Petroff showed his superiority by making it "two straight" and winning in a bout that nearly stole the show. Both wrestlers giving an excellent demonstration of modern wrestling injected with sufficient rough tactics to keep the fans interested. The opening bout saw Tom George and Ralph Slevick battle for 30 minutes to a draw, George being slightly heavy for the more agile Hungarian.

Roughest in Years.

The main bout between Parnell and Gyroffy was the wildest and roughest wrestling bout seen locally in years as the contestants apparently resorted to any hold or trick and continued to stand toe-to-toe and slug it out with their fists. Parnell proved the aggressor in the matter of sharp tactics inasmuch as he was eventually disqualified for fouling by Referee Wells. The boys opened cautiously and settled down to methodically go about their duties, but Parnell repeatedly tried rough tactics in the general direction of Gyroffy's injured ear, all of which threw crimalations from the Hungarian. Gyroffy won the initial fall of the bout following a series of well placed drop kicks that left Parnell prostrate on the canvas, the Hungarian failing on him for the fall. After a ten minute rest Parnell returned to the ring apparently revived and in a pugnacious mood as he violently attacked Gyroffy and repeatedly threw him from the ring, despite the frantic efforts of Referee Wells. Gyroffy tried in vain to retaliate, but his beaten tactics of evasion by a series of punishing blows smashes terminated by a flying body slam that sent Parnell the fall amid the cat-calls and boos of the fans. Parnell secured the initial fall the third round in a rough manner, using fists, elbows and knees interspersed the opportunity presented itself. Parnell "hung" Gyroffy between the ropes and on official went to the dangling Hungarian's rescue Parnell attacked Gyroffy anew, driving him from the ring as he loosened Gyroffy. After order had been restored the rough-house tactics Referee Wells separated the contestants and ordered fully disqualified Parnell for fouling and declaring Gyroffy the winner. It was directly following this that Gyroffy hit Parnell with his fist and a general melee broke loose with fans assisting Referee Wells to escort the wrestlers to their dressing rooms.

The semi-final bout between Dan Petroff and Chris Findlay also was a bout of interest. The veteran Russian proved too crafty for the scientific Detroit badman and pinned him to the mat in 17 minutes with a reverse body slam. Findlay protested loudly his shoulders had not been on the mat when after some persuasion the Kiwanis Club announced the bout would be of the two falls out of three, instead of the originally set fall affair. Petroff returned to the ring and took the second fall quite handily. Findlay and Petroff put on a stellar exhibition and drew rounds of applause. Finding proving the difference in wrestling house antics, which led to his downfall and defeat.

Opening Beat a Draw.

The opening bout between Tom George, the Grecian bare-footed wrestler and Ralph Slevick was most interesting, the boys wrestling nicely for 30 minutes to a draw. George carried too much weight for the Hungarian, who, however, won the admiration of the fans by his agility and gameness. Following the bout it was announced that Gyroffy had won the right to meet Al Dunlop in a return bout here next Friday.

The Summary.

Semi-final—Chris Petroff, Russia, 210, won over Chris Findlay, 211, Detroit, Petroff taking first fall in 1.-3 and second in 8.15.

Main bout—Johnnie Gyroffy, 205, Hungary, won over Walter Parnell, 215, St. Catharines. Gyroffy won first fall in 13.06, Parnell second fall in 9.35; Gyroffy being awarded bout as Parnell was disqualified after 14.25 minutes of wrestling in final round.

Referee—Bert Wells, Belleville.

Announcer—Frank Donenico, Kiwanis Club, Belleville.

REGAINS TITLE

Tony Canzoneri, sticky Italian gives his Ambers a real uphill going over in 15-round bout at Madison Square Garden, retaining the unanimous decision of the judges and reference. Canzoneri holds the lightweight title from 1930 to 1933 being defeated by Barney Ross.

TORONTO LEAFS CROWD NEWARK FOR LEADERSHIP

Defeat Bears 7-2 and Only Few Percentage Points From Top

ROCHESTER SPLIT

Suffer First Defeat at Home by Syracuse Chiefs

A four-game spurt in the last few days has put Toronto Maple Leafs, the club's baseball team operating in the Little fuss in the International League battle, up into the position of leading the parade for Newark for first lead.

After touring the "southern" half of the circuit with only fair success, the Leafs began to "click" when they returned to their home park and so far have won six out of eight games, despite frequent displays of batting weakness. Their fourth triumph in five games came over Newark yesterday, put them into a virtual tie with the Bears, leading by only a few percentage points.

Toronto's rise was the leading development of the day as far as the standings were concerned, although Rochester dropped into third place a few points ahead of Montreal by splitting a double header with Syracuse while the Royals were losing a single game to Albany.

Five Games At Home.

The Red Wings easily belted out a 10-2 triumph in the opener, collecting 11 hicks, including homers by Jake Powers and Estel Crabtree, behind John Berly's four-hit flinging. Hy Vandenburg accounted for the Chiefs' lone tally, a circuit clout. The Rochester team its first home defeat of the season, the Syracusans getting hits well and drove in the winning runs in the 11th inning.

The Royals spotted Albany a six-run lead on Harry Smythe's wildness and a couple of errors in the field, rallied to tie the count at 7-7 in the eighth and finally belted out 8-7 when the Senators nicked Lauri Myllykangas for a pair of runs in the ninth.

Despite Ollie Carnegie's batting, Jersey Citians were beat out, 6-5 and 7-5 to end a four-game losing streak. Carnegie accounted for all five Bisons' runs with a brace of homers but Vince Barton went him one better with a circuit blow in the tenth clouting for the year in the fifth for the deciding run.

TONY CANZONERI GAINS DECISION OVER LOU AMBERS

Comes Back to Win Lightweight Crown of World

BOUT GOES LIMIT

Tony Outsmarts And Outboxes Ambers Over Route

By ALAN GOULD

New York, May 11 (AP)—It's an old ring axiom that they never come back but black-haired Tony Canzoneri, dapper little fellow who looks like a miniature Babe Ruth and packs P.N.T. in his right hand, today is the exception to prove the rule.

For all practical purposes, Canzoneri's decisive victory over Lou Ambers last night in rounding Madison Square Garden returns him to the status of lightweight champion of the world, successor to Chicago's Barney Ross, who recently relinquished his title, and the first fighter in the history of the class to regain the crown. Tony lost the championship to Ross in 1933 after holding it for nearly three years.

In recapturing a title that has been held by some of the finest craftsmen in fighting annals, Canzoneri thrilled a crowd of 17,433 cash customers, many packing the garden, with as fine an exhibition of boxing skill as New York has witnessed since the eminent Benny Leonard turned back the challenge of Lefty Lew Tendler at the Yankee Stadium a dozen years ago.

Ambers Floored.

Canzoneri floored the rugged, stout-hearted Ambers twice in the third round with vicious right-hand-er and again late the "Herkimer Hurricane" down in the 15th round with a long belt to the chin as Lou was hustling to get out of the way. From start to finish, despite the rugged, upstate boy's most courageous and aggressive efforts to turn the tide, Canzoneri had the situation under almost complete control. Tony outsmarted, outboxed and outpunched Lou so convincingly through the first ten rounds the unanimous decision of Referee Arthur Donovan and the two judges was a formality at the finish.

On this observer's score-card, Canzoneri captured nine rounds, with Lou going to Ambers and one even. Lou rallied briskly in the last four rounds but was abruptly halted when he failed to duck another dynamiting-laden right, in the closing moments o' the fight, and hit the floor, bouncing up without taking a count.

Shifting Jimmy Foxx of A's From First to Catching Fails To Affect Value to His Team

Leading Hitter of Loop And Smacks Most Homers

TIGERS CLIMB

Rookie Southpaw Wins Third Straight For Detroit

By HUGH S. FULLERTON JR.

Although much has been said pro and con about the great Athletics experiment of shifting Jimmie Foxx, as outstanding first baseman, behind the plate to become a catcher, of still unrealized value, when it comes down to cold figures the change apparently hasn't affected Jimmie's value to the team.

The latest batting records show Foxx at the top of the American League in batting with an average of .403 and leading in home runs with well despite some stiff opposition from a couple of his team mates. That seems to indicate'sp no fault of Jimmie's the A's are seventh in the standing.

From practically belted the A's into security from the danger of a drop into the cellar yesterday when he led the way to a 7-4 victory over the Browns that gave them a full game working margin over St. Louis. In four trips to the plate he smacked a double and homer No. 8.

Rookie Wins Third.

Joe Sullivan, rookie left hander who has aided considerably in Detroit's "bounce" up from the cellar, turned in his third straight triumph by checking Washington 8-4 and Chuck Klein Jones' Phillies went ahead of the A's. Sullivan also turned in a seven-hit game, given up two runs with a pair of hits and scored once as the Tigers belted Bump Hadley out with 13 hits and rally in the seventh.

Completing the day's roundup for the portsiders, Rookie Vito Tamulus of the Yankees proved effective in the pinches and the New Yorkers ended a four-game losing streak by a 6-3 triumph over the league leading Indians. A radically revised Cleveland outfield, with Roy Weatherman's return to action, started the Tribe off to a lead off Gomez but Hildebrand in the first two innings. Chapman lasted less than two innings before Ira Thurley home again became balky and he dropped out.

Chicago's White Sox, ousted from the lead Thursday, let a chance to regain it when they took a second beating from' Boston 12-2. Rallies in four runs in the first and five in the sixth drove George Earnshaw to the showers. Jack Wilson and Ben Chapman batted less than two innings before his Charley horse again became balky and he dropped out.

ADDISON LLOYD TO HEAD LOOP

Seven Clubs Comprise Horse Shoe Pitching League

One new entry was received bringing the total entries of the Hastings Horse Shoe Pitching League up to seven when that organization held their annual meeting in Leslie's Shoe Store last evening. Nearly 50 delegates and pitch representatives were on hand to swell the meeting and elect officers for the coming year. Addison Lloyd of this city being elected to the office of president for the year 1935.

The six original clubs or communities to compose the loop in 1934 were present and are Belleville, Tweed, Stirling, Frankford, Thomasburg and Oak Lake; the Trenton Airport being received into the loop elevating its roster to seven teams for the coming season. Besides the officers elected two delegates from each club will constitute the league executive for the ensuing year. The result of the election of officers was:

President—Addison Lloyd, Belleville; vice-president, Mr. L. Morton, Thomasburg; secretary - treasurer, Mr. A. Nathan, Oak Lake.

The opening dates for the South Hastings Horse Shoe Pitching League were announced following the meeting and are:

May 27—Belleville at Airport.
May 28—Oak Lake at Thomasburg
May 30—Stirling at Tweed.

The balance of the schedule will be drawn up by the league secretary as soon as possible and published. The retiring officers were voted the club's thanks for the splendid manner in which the league was conducted in its initial year, 1934, while an air of optimism was voiced for membership in the future of the organization.

OMAHA FAVORITE FOR PREAKNESS

Nellie Flag, Defeated in Derby is Chief Threat

By ORLO ROBERTSON

Baltimore, May 11 (AP)—Over the oval where he won the derby on victory eleven years ago, Warren Wright's Nellie Flag, daughter of the famous Nellie Morse, today will begin to avenge her defeat in the Kentucky Derby when she faced William Woodward's Omaha, victory at the Downs, and nine other three-year-old thoroughbreds in the 45th running of the $75,000 Preakness Pimlico.

Even but not disgraced when she finished fourth in the derby, Nellie Flag came up to today's race with both her rivals and Trainer Bert Williams confident she could stop Mount Joe Cotton's Omaha from the red horse to the championship of the division.

The glory that was hers prior to the running of the derby was not to be hers, however, for it was the son of Gallant Fox that was made the 9 to 5 pre-race choice by bettors in the 1930 triumph of his gallant sire. Omaha was also well favored by the advance delegations of the expected crowd of 60,000 to was expected to answer the call to boots and saddles at even money or less. Post time for the 1 3-16 race choice by bettors was 3:45 p.m. (Eastern Standard Time).

200 TEEN AGE GIRLS PERFORM

Present Varied Program of Gymnastics at The Collegiate

With exactness and precision a demonstration of gymnastics and physical training was presented at the Belleville Collegiate and Vocational Gymnasium last night by 200 teenage girls of the B.C.I.V.S. The program was arranged by Miss E. Allison, associate physical instructress and highly enjoyed by the large number of spectators present.

Every conceivable manner of physical training, both mental and moral presented with perfect rhythm. Tumbling acts, rhythmic drills, marches, pyramids, tap dances as well as entertained games of badminton, volleyball and basketball were also on the program. The gallery surrounding the collegiate gymnasium was filled to capacity with interested parents and friends and guests as the girls demonstrated their ability and agility on the "gym" floor.

The demonstration terminated a season's endeavors under Miss Allison, who trained the girls along the lines of progressive physical culture steadily since last September and to much of the success of the demonstration is due. During practically every performance during the evening, Miss Lorna Ridley played musical accompaniments to provide the necessary, pleasured rhythm and added to the success of the evening's entertainment which was a feast of comment and congratulations were heard following the demonstration.

"CLOTHIERS OF QUALITY"

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Right here and now we want to for 60 games, a rather lengthy schedule for a local softball league.

The local bexin squad started practicing in the arena Monday night with the result that a goodly number of local players were on hand. The locals inducted Cy Jarraway, Jimmie Seamark and a couple of other well known junior players set to try their hands at tossing the little white ball around. Naturally these new comers did not show up as flashy as they would with a hockey stick, but they demonstrated general knowledge of the game and their hockey ability naturally tends to bring them in close proximity with a lacrosse stick. In the meantime the Airport and Trenton players will soon be training with the locals in preparation for the opening game on the 24th. To introduce the game among the teen age boys of the city an open meeting of all boys interested in playing will be held at the "Y" on Tuesday.

Although it is slightly early to talk of rugby football, it is understood that Tweed would endorse the opportunity of interesting a Central Ontario Rugby League next fall. Rumours have the Quinte, "Blue Devils" coming in with Belleville and Trenton with the addition of Lindsay a strong intermediate O. R. F. U. group would be formed in the Central Ontario region.

The College Hill Cubs elevated themselves to a ring berth in the Tweed Softball League title by trimming the C.O.C. to the tune of 9 to 6 last evening. Incidentally the Cubs were forced to come from behind in the early stages of the Aajmaa clash for the leadership on Monday at the "Flats."

Apparently local fans enjoy free-for-alls, fistic encounters and general badinan dished up with the wrestling bouts as the paid customers bowled well filled and glee as Walter Parnell and Johnnie Gyroffy battled madman and last night. One thing is certain, Gyroffy is the white-haired boy and the idol of the local wrestling crowd, that is judgig from the manner in which they showed in his rescue during last night's demonstration in the main event scheduled. Gyroffy won the right to meet Madman Al Dunlop in a return bout here next Friday night, but he won't find the Cleveland villain quite as easy to handle as Parnell, despite last night's pugnacious display. Incidentally the return of Dan Petroff, after having successfully stamped himself as a favorite with the fans, was quite noticeably, and the fans were glad to have him again. Findlay, These boys put up a real scrap, but the fans are not anxious to take home, only Petroff's experience and general ring ability saved him from defeat at the hands of the plucky Detroiter. Findlay is a good wrestler and a real fighter, but he is no match for the more experienced Petroff. Petroff is anxious to get a local ring with a heavier opponent.

Horse shoe pitching is fast gaining prominence as a local district league. Last night when the South Hastings horse shoe pitchers met locally nearly 50 delegates were on hand. Those present informs us it was a most successful meeting and the seven teams or communities were represented, the six original in 1934 and the Trenton Airport. Addison Lloyd of this city was the unanimous choice of the meeting as president for 1935.

LOCAL BOXING MAESTRO

Promoter Clem Allen

The local matchmaker of the Stewart Warner-Alemite A. C. who recently signed four Ottawa boxing stars for a ring card at the local arena on May 15 versus four Central Ontario titleholders in championship bouts. Four other first class bouts are included on the night's program which promises to be the outstanding card of the year in Belleville and will be presented by the local club, the expense has been spared by Matchmaker Allen in procuring the best talent possible in the Capital City.

YESTERDAY'S STARS

Joe Sullivan, Tigers—Pitched a brilliant game against the Senators and helped win it by driving in two runs with pair of singles.

Bob Johnson, Athletics—Had perfect day at bat against Browns with four hits.

Frank Crosetti, Yankees—Led his club with triple and single, knocking in two runs.

SPEEDBOAT USED TO STOP POACHING

Toronto, May 11 (CP)—Within 10 days a small speedboat, whose home port will be Port Arthur, will start patrolling Lake Superior to check poaching and generally enforce regulations of the Ontario Department of Game and Fisheries, it was announced today at the office of D. J. Taylor, Deputy Minister.

Presence of such craft on the upper lake will mean the department possesses a small law-enforcement boat on all the Great Lakes but Huron, while Mr. Taylor declined to commenting on just how great was the menace of poaching in Ontario commercial fish waters, he said the poaching problem has been less at Lake Huron and Georgian Bay, the Eastern end of Lake Superior and in Lake Erie.

Daily Short Story

Plot Pattern

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

This is no joke, this business of casting into metal the trials and tribulations of those well-meaning folk who come to you and say: "Something bad just happened to me that ought to make a really interesting story." Every once in a while I need a rest from this treadmill, so I'll just pass the latest bit of information on to you, give you a few pointers, if you don't mind—and let you write your own story today.

CHARACTERS: It's never quite ethical to use correct names of people involved in these stories, so you'll first have to decide upon fictitious ones. Take my advice and shy clear of "Abercrombie" and long names like that. They become very wearing after the first few minutes before the fire and and you'll wonder why you hadn't chosen "Bob." What, then, is wrong with Bob—and Beth? Not low in interest?

DESCRIPTION: You needn't go into great detail about Bob and Beth. Let the reader use his imagination. Everyone has his own idea of beauty and if you start describing Beth as being "a golden blonde with starry eyes," some reader, not particularly partial to blondes, will quickly run through the paper until he finds the comic page and leave you and your story flat. "Beautiful Beth" is always safe.

Stimulus

SITUATION: Young love, an always interesting subject, is our theme for the day. Beth and Bob live in a small town, a suburb of the big city. Bob is tall, dark and handsome (that's always safe, too), and is much in love with Beth, who works in the library. The Clarion Call, the local newspaper, is sponsoring a contest, the idea of which is to see how many three-letter English words can be made of the sentence: "Abracadabra is a cabalistic word written triangularly and worn to cure ague and kindred maladies." Bob is poor but honest and that $5,000 first prize would come in mighty handy.

DIALOGUE: You don't always have to say: "Beth said" or "said Bob." For example take this bit of telephone conversation:

"Hello Beth."

"Hello Bob, how let you've got another word for me to look up."

"Sorry I have to bother you like this, Beth, but you know how much I depend on that first prize. If anyone we can get muzzled—if I'm lucky enough to win it."

"Why, Bob dear—"

"Will you look in that big dictionary over there and see if there's such a word as 'a-l-i-f?'"

"Yes, indeed. Hold the line a second."

"Hello Bob, there's a word 'a-l-i' also spelled 'e-y-o-l' and means a small lake especially in a river."

"Thanks a lot, Beth, you're a great help. See you tonight?"

"Yes—at eight-thirty."

TIME ELEMENT: You don't have to record every single thing Bob and Beth do in the course of a day, week or month. Just say something like this: "During the next three weeks, Beth and Bob labored over the word-building contest. Then, comes the day when the winner's name is to be announced in the Clarion Call. Beth and Bob are in a dither of anticipation."

The climax

CLIMAX: This is the most important part of the whole story. What the French call the denouement. And at this point, you'll have to revert to movie—

DIALOGUE: "Hurry, Bob, thumb through the paper and see who wins that first prize."

"I am hurrying, Beth, but my fingers are all thumbs. I'm so excited. Page one, page two, three, four .... Why! I can't find it anywhere!"

"Trouble with you is that the story's too big for you. There it is right on page one!"

"Where? Why, why, Beth ..... it's a picture of you. You win first prize! And I didn't even know you'd entered the contest. But that's pretty terrible for me, much as I like to see you win. It means that I can't marry you—now or ever."

"If it's that measly $5,000 check that's preying you, forget it. I couldn't afford to miss the opportunity to marry you, so I just tried my luck in the contest, too. I thought with the two of us trying we just couldn't lose. And here's the check, all signed over to you."

"Gee that's swell of you, Beth, but I can't do this, accept your winnings. It isn't honorable. It just isn't done. Why, I can't—"

POSTSCRIPT: And just let it trail off like that. Anyone with an ounce of brains knows that Bob accepted the check after some persuasion, that he and Beth clinched in a fervent kiss, were subsequently married and, we hope, lived happily ever after. But I'm too lazy to write the story today. See what you can do with these meagre facts.

Little Benny's Note Book

I come home for supper feeling pritty good but looking worse, as the saying. Benny for land sakes what have you got on your forehead? Is that a lump? she said.

Mmm? Partly, I said.

Well it was partly a bump and partly a bruise, me having looked at it in different slow wind ows on my way home, and ma said, O dear, you've been in some kind of an accident. I just know I haven't you?

Yes mam, it was ony a little collision, I said, and ma said, A collision. O my goodness what kind of a collision?

Sid Hunt's head got in the way of my head, I said, and ma said, How redickulus. I never heard of anything so preposterus. How is it that nobody but you ever seems to have such silly things happen to them? she said.

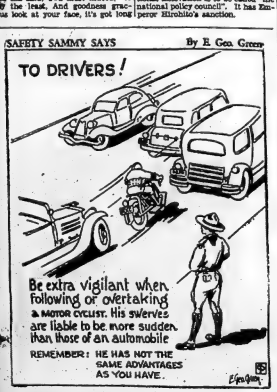
I guess I must be unusual, I said, and ma said, You must indeed. To say the least. And goodness gracious look at your face, it's got long scratches on it, nobody's head could of done that no matter how much it got in your way, she said, and I said, No mam, my face got in the way of Sid's finger nails.

Benny Potts, what's all this about an accident? ma said. Have you been fighting again? I want a simple yes and no anser, she said, and I said, Sure, ma, but O, the several kinds of accidents can happen during a fite, because that's just when accidents do. O wunderful how about the fearse accident that happened to Sid Hunt's nose? I said.

What do you meen? ma said, and I said, It got in the way of my fist. Sid's mother said she was going to call you up about it, I said.

Both a boy, ma said.

Meening me, and when Mrs. Hunt called up ma told her it must of been Sid's fault as much as what it was mine.



Wich it must of.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED—

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

The cannibals' first prisoner also was bound hand and foot for fear that he might escape and rob the cannibals of their feast at the last moment. He heard the commotion following the crash of Tarzan's body through the trees.

Now as he stood back against the wall, he looked upon his fellow-prisoner with mixed feelings of surprise and compassion. Never had he seen a more perfect specimen of manhood than that of the unconscious figure before him.

He wondered how the giant man had been captured. It was evident from the new prisoner's apparel and weapons that he was as much a savage as his captors, yet from his clean-cut features the first prisoner realized the newcomer was a white man.

Presidently the gray eyes opened and blankly looked about. With returning consciousness, they addressed their keen intelligence. A moment later the prisoner rolled with an effort on his side and drew himself to a sitting position.

It was felt that this led to considerable confusion as neighboring centres might adopt the measure at different times.

The rebate is what is known as the Thirteenth Power Bill and is the difference between the amount paid for power throughout the year and the actual cost to the Ontario Commission in producing it. The rebate last year was over $4,000 more than the amount for the period before, which was about $1,700.

Elderly Leaders Weary

Replying on behalf of the recipients of the honorary degrees of doctor of law at Queen's Convocation, W. G. Clark, deputy minister of finance for the Dominion, gave the graduates a few words of advice: "The three big problems of any graduate today was to adjust himself to a world torn with strife and change," said the speaker. He advised his hearers to early get their feet on the bottom rung and the rest would not be so hard. The upper rungs were filled with men who were weary with the world's problem, he said. University graduates had a large and important part to play in the necessary reorganization and rebuilding of the world, said Dr. Clark.

It has been reported to the local police that some person poured a large quantity of tar or varnish or some similar dark and sticky substance into the gas tank of the automobile owned by Dallon Pickes, who lives at 272 Clarke Street. It is believed that the deed was done while the car was parked in the street. Not knowing what had taken place, Mr. Pickes operated his vehicle until it refused to run and then an investigation at a local garage disclosed the scurvy trick which had been committed. The heavy fluid was drawn and pumped right through the car, up the feed line and into the motor and carburetor, doing a great deal of damage en route and rendering the automobile temporarily useless.

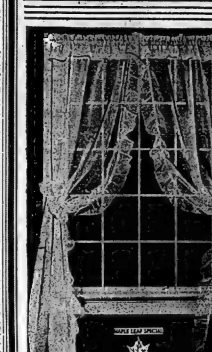
Reward for Missing Youth



The strange disappearance of Harold Heaven, 23 year old youth who disappeared from the summer cottage of his parents at Horseshoe Bells, near Minden Village early in October and of whom no trace whatsoever has been found, is not yet solved. A reward of $100 is offered by Mr. Cecil Heaven of Oakwood Crescent, Hamilton, for any information leading to the strange disappearance. It was on a Sunday early in October that Harold left a light burning in the cottage and was seen to burn brightly by a neighbor and who, having occasion to call on Monday, found the lamp had burned dry. There was no sign of the missing youth. The neighbor being alarmed, sent word to relatives who at once searched miles of the surrounding country. Provincial Police Officer Evans and several men joined in the search until winter set in without a single trace and the family will leave no stones unturned until some trace is found. There are miles and miles of wooded land, swamps and rocks; also many lakes, so there is a possibility he may never be found but the family have not given up hope and offer the above reward.

PRINCE OF WALES DRIVES IN STATE

Takes Part in Welsh Celebration of Silver Jubilee

Cardiff, Wales, May 11.—(AP)—The Prince of Wales drove in a State carriage through gaily-decorated streets here today in the culmination of the Welsh rejoicings for the King's Silver Jubilee.

After his ceremonial drive through streets lined with cheering Welshmen the Prince plunged into a crowded program which included the laying of a wreath on the Welsh National Memorial, pageant of Industries of Wales at Caihay's Park, a school children's festival and a mid-afternoon military review at Sophia Gardens.

Wales has celebrated the Jubilee largely in its own vocal way, by singing. All week long there have been countless contests between choirs, soloists and school children.

There have been Gymanea Gauu, hymn singing festival, everywhere, as well, for the churches and Chapels have been filled daily and nightly with young folks societies. Other social centres have had singing contests, including workmen's institutions and unemployed clubs.

"SEX APPEAL"

Mlle. Denise Michand is pictured in the dock of a court in Paris as she is charged with using "sex appeal influence" on a young clerk employed by the government. According to the clerk she used her "influence" on him in order to procure papers and dossiers which were incriminating to her real lover.

RIGID CENSORSHIP HIDES OPERATIONS

U. S. Plan Manoeuvre in Broad Expanse of Pacific

Honolulu, May 11—(AP)—Hints of even more amazing aerial operations came from high United States naval sources today while the navy's fleet of 46 seaplanes continued its unprecedented secret manoeuvres somewhere in the Pacific west of Hawaii.

Reports were that 450 aircraft would take part but amplification was not forthcoming here nor would naval officials at Washington comment.

The aircraft are aboard surface vessels of the fleet now manoeuvring under simulated wartime conditions in a great triangular area in the Pacific.

"Chiki's play" was the vague phrase used by one Washington official in what was assumed to be a comparison of the present flight with the one believed contemplated.

How serious the simulated warfare is has been felt by several officers who have been reprimanded during the last few days by superior officers for inadvertent admissions concerning operations of ships and planes which became public.

Montreal, May 11.—(CP)—Headed by a veteran of 81 years of age, who has been sweeping Montreal streets for over 27 years, between 20 and 25 "white wings", are to be placed on pension at $1 a day. They will not be replaced as the saving of their wages of 35 cents an hour will contribute to the 1935-36 budget economies, the city council announced.

RECOVERS MEDAL

Regina, May 11—(CP)—Mr. Justice W. M. Martin has recovered his lost Jubilee medal. He said it disappeared shortly after it was pinned to the lapel of his coat. Mrs. Martin found it in the upper coat pocket where it had slipped when the pin opened.

CARP ARE MENACE TO GAME FISH

Fisherman Claims Black Bass Fishing Will Be Ruined

Thousands of hungry carp were feeding and spawning in the mouth and bottom of the Bay of Quinte and surrounding waters, stirring up the shore silt and covering up the rocky shoals and bars, where black bass and pike have been in paradise, according to the female fish, rooting into the weed beds and rich mud, and destroying the feeding vegetation as they browse are increasing, according to reports, by the thousands, and ever succeeds year. Although not yourselves by nature, driving other fish from the shallow waters, destroying their numbers and habits, unwanted by the majority of local fishermen and anglers alike.

They have carp become one of the latest reported menaces to the already overburdened black bass of the year are such coarse fish welcome, generally during the season of Lent and holiday time. During this period, when the fish command a fair price in the local fish markets. At other times the net depositors are thrown overboard by disgusted fishermen as a nuisance. Already the fish have made their way into northern lake and river waters, so increased in numbers their presence is most undesirable and drastic measures to good fishing. Generally they are introduced by anglers, who use them as bait for the coarser fish.

As one plan to remedy the nuisance, the local fishermen will make a suggestion to the Ontario Department of Game and Fisheries, that a corps of unemployed men be given a task of netting the fish and, if edible and other waters, merely for carp, which, as mentioned, will be caught. It is pointed out by him that plenty of local fishermen and outfits are available for this work and would readily undertake it.

Dear little one! When first you crept
Into my empty arms, unloved
And nameless, seeking shelter from
A heedless world, did not know
That I, your pretty ways would note
My listless heart. I had so long
Accepted the decree that seemed
To banish hopes of childish song
And laughter in my home, that I
Imagined I possessed enough
Of joy in my years; nor dreamed that aught
Was lacking to complete my joy.
But since you came with smiles and tears
And guileless ways and innocence
To fill my mind, and bring a sweet
Confusion where dull order reigned
Before I took into your eyes
To see how good it is to think
Of all the wasted years,
And that which I call resignation was
But selfish indolence.
Now I can only wonder vaguely how
I could have deemed my shallow life
Sufficient. But you came to turn
My steps in other paths but those
That circle ever round and round

A factor in the universe,
And stand at last with those whose

Is happy been to act as guide
To some dear child upon the way

Clear eyes behold a vision of
The love of an eternity.

MUSIC

Organist and Choir of Christ Church and Guest Soloist Please Many

At close of evensong in Christ Church on Sunday evening a recital was given under the direction of the organist and choir director, Mr. George N. Mayboe. The organ number, Mr. Mayboe's own composition, Sulite Gothique, by Boellman, was played on a pipe organ solo by Mr. Mayboe in a masterly style. The second number "Gloria in Excelsis Out Thy Light" was sung by a choir of boys, men, and girls. The choir sang well and giving excellent expression to this number. Mrs. Mayboe, contralto, sang a group of three numbers, "Awake Harp and Harmony," by Parker, "Today I Will Hear His Voice," and "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," by Handel. Mrs. Mayboe's soprano is of very fine quality, is well trained, and her interpretation of the numbers was completely satisfying. The fourth number on the program was Sacred Scens "The Swan," played on the organ by Mr. Mayboe with the choir singing "Out of the depths." Mr. Healey William organist of the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, Toronto, the composition, a part of the communion service, which was sung at the morning service in Christ Church, called upon all the resources of the choir and the ensemble effect was stirring. Mr. Mayboe and choir received high commendation for their efforts. In the close Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" was played as the postlude. During evensong Mrs. Stevenson had sung an arrangement of Mendelsohn's "Hear My Prayer."

BABY FALLS 15FT. WITHOUT INJURY

Donald Moreau, 18-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ken Moreau, 24 Jane street, yesterday fell 15 feet from a bedroom window to the ground below and apparently suffered no injuries.

The little fellow was playing in the bedroom and is thought to have been amusing himself by throwing small articles out of the window which was only open about seven or eight inches. It is believed he threw his pajama socks out of window and leaning over to see where they went, became unbalanced and fell out of the window on his face to the ground below, while fortunately was quite mucky.

His parents, who were downstairs, were attracted by his cries and Mr. Moreau quickly ran upstairs to find out the trouble. Not seeing Donny, when he reached there he happened to hear his cries coming from the outside. He quickly got down the stairs and around to the side of the house in time to see Donny slowly getting up.

No injuries resulted and Don is none the worse for his experience. Today he is playing around quite unconcerned as to the excitement he had caused.

MANY ENQUIRIES FOR CAMP SITES

First Signs That Tourist Business is Will Be Heavy

First signs that the tourist business will be a bumper one through the district this season are given in the office of the local Chamber of Commerce. Already personal enquiries by tourists passing through the city for information of this section and the country ahead have become fairly heavy and are reported in excess of the number received up to this time one year ago. Curiously the number of enquiries received from south of the border for information regarding tourist accommodation in the northern part of the district has fallen off this season. Hundreds of camp sites, cottages, lakes and guides are listed by the Chamber together with other vital information necessary. A new map of the five counties district being also other information, being prepared by the newly formed publicity committee will be available for distribution shortly, it was announced.

SIDEWALKS STIR TP. RATEPAYERS

Walk On Highway Is Considered Government Matter

A very animated meeting was held by the members of the Thurlow Township Ratepayers' Association at the Bridge of Wales' School Friday, May 10th.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and carried.

The chairman addressed a number of the members their sincere and heartiest congratulations to their secretary, Mr. Keller Foster, appreciated his presence wishing him the very best of success in the future as his services were of much value and importance.

Correspondence was read by the secretary including a letter from with the council in regard to the business of the Association which included a sidewalk on the King-ston Highway for the safety of school children. This the council considered a government matter and not a council matter. The members considered the proper course had been taken, and that the Council should take it up with the County Council to have this case investigated as soon as possible.

The chairman informed the members that he had had a conversation with the reeve, Mr. Gray, who promised to attend this meeting, as he has not a very bad cold but was not able to attend. In conclusion, the chairman expressed regret and wished Mr. Gray a speedy recovery and said he hoped to see him at their next meeting.

During the interview with the council, the reeve had suggested that Mr. Meens accompany them on their inspection of the sidewalks, which was moved by Mr. Goldrough, seconded by Mr. Gerow that a committee interview Mr. Scott pertain Mr. Stevenson and with the use of Hydro.

It was moved by Mr. Gerow, seconded by Mr. Logan that the committee interview the council in regard to a new bridge at Point Ann before the reeve.

Considerable discussion was centered around the matter of sidewalks and their condition and that the council should give the matter their immediate attention was the opinion expressed by some members.

A.I.I. PARADE TO DIVINE SERVICE

Major the Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne Delivers Sermon

Martial music filled the air on Sunday morning as the Argyll Light Infantry, Duke of Edinburgh's marched through the streets to attend divine service at St. Thomas' Church. Led by the A.I.I. Pipe Band and the A.I.I. Brass Band, the regiment under command of Major H. P. Alford and the command of the colours. The Battery was under the command of Lieutenant Ross Armstrong.

The regiment and battery paraded at the Armouries, marching thence to the Dundas Church by way of Bridge Street East, entering the church ground at the eastern entrance. After the service the parade reformed and marched east to John Street, along John Street to Victoria Avenue, then to Front Street to Bridge Street and thence to the Armouries, where they were dismissed. Major the Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, chaplain of the regiment, delivered the sermon and joined in the parade from and to the Armouries. Col. Roscoe Vanderwater, D.S.O., V.D., is Honorary O.C. of the regiment, was a guest at the church parade and marched in full dress uniform. The regimental and battery were quite smart in appearance and many viewed the parade from the street. Col. Vanderwater took the salute as the parade entered the Armouries on their return from the service.

The chaplain of the regiment preached an excellent sermon based upon the text taken from the second chapter of the epistle of James St. Peter and the seventeenth verse, "Honour all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the King."

During his remarks the chaplain referred to the fact that it was on being May 12th, was the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Batoche in which the Queen's forces were victorious and brought to an end the Riel Rebellion. During the engagement Lt.-Col. Halliwell, a former Commanding Officer of the Argyll Light Infantry was wounded. Col. Halliwell at the time was a Major and Lieutenant. The senior non-commissioned officers of the regiment attended in a body and occupied the front seats in the church.

POLICE COURT

W. H. Aylesworth, Wellington, pleaded guilty to a charge of forgery, when he appeared in local police court before Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., today. Aylesworth admitted forging and endorsing his wife's name to her pension cheque for the sum of $14.50.

Due to extenuating circumstances surrounding the entire case, His Worship severely reprimanded the accused and meted out a two year suspended sentence, upon the payment of the costs of the court and making restitution, amounting to $21.50 in all. Aylesworth's employer appeared in the court and highly recommended the accused in the matter of character reference.

The accused was given three months in which to take the sum covered and in default of payment a sentence of six months in the Ontario Reformatory was given.

One lone inebriate was fined ten dollars and costs, while a Sidney resident was fined a similar amount after being apprehended driving a motor vehicle without the benefit of an individual operator's license.

Following the court proceedings a lengthy conference among His Worship, Crown Attorney R. O. Donnan, K.C., and Chief Constable Frank Smith, of Deseronto, was opened in relationship to the charges pending the arrival of the police magistrate that happened at Deseronto last Saturday night.

Thirty-four transients were given shelter at the police station over the week end, 16 on Saturday night and 18 on Sunday night. A rather comical situation developed in the police on Saturday night when one of the transients complained of not feeling well and had been ordered un a rash. A physician found the man suffering from a mild form of German measles, and he was asked to remove himself from the station. The man was not in a serious condition.

A. W. Gow, Ottawa, appeared at the sergeant's desk Saturday and unfolded a tale concerning the theft of his bicycle at the western city limits. According to Gow he was riding east when he was crowded into the ditch by a passing motorist and being thrown to the fall and after picking himself up he started to walk about for a time to locate his strength. After a short period he returned to where he had left his wheel to find it gone.

Early Sunday morning a Thurlow resident informed the police he had seen a bicycle abandoned near the C.P.R. tracks at Gilmour's Crossing. Investigation found the bike to be the one reported lost at the above end of the city by Gow. Whether the man became mixed in his directions in giving his story or not still remains to be solved. The bicycle will be shipped to Ottawa at Gow's expense.

SEEING THE CHIEF SCOUT

The visit of the Chief Scout, Lord Baden-Powell, with Lady Baden-Powell and their daughters to Canada, will stimulate scouting—and the activities of the Girl Guides. On Saturday sixteen thousand greeted the Chief in Toronto, while ten thousand Guides greeted Lady Baden-Powell the same afternoon.

The message of the Chief Scout was important. He impressed upon the boys to make friends not only in their own country but in all countries, for the greatest insurance against war lay in a universal spirit of friendly understanding.

Such a rally inspiring the ranks of Scouts throughout the Dominion will give those supporters of the Scout movement in best the best encouragement they require to spur them on to continued effort to put scouting in the high place which they feel it ought to occupy.

Scouting takes the boy when he is in the most impressionable stage of life, when he is preparing for his life work. In their ranks these days it is very essential that something of this kind which encourages the nobler instincts of boyhood should enter for the distractions and the problems of this age without some such defence might easily unsettle the young who are coming forward to youth and manhood.

The Boy Scout movement has a central figure—the founder of the system. Scouts of this day have an unusual privilege, while the founder of the organization lives, to practise scouting and to contact with him. This will always be, for as he said on Saturday, many of them would never see him again as there are inevitable changes which cannot be prevented. So the boy scout of today is a very privileged person as he finds his inspiration in the fountain head of the organization.

LINDSAY BOARD OF TRADE

Lindsay is looking forward to the establishment of a Board of Trade and naturally there are a number of problems which have been placed before the citizens for consideration. Lindsay Post gives some attention to these:—

"It is felt by some that a number of local business and professional men who would devote an hour or two of their time once a month to sit in conference with the town council and discuss matters relative to the industrial life of the town and the promotion of more tourist traffic would be the solution to the problem. Such a program commends itself from an economical standpoint as there would be no funds required for its operation and it is felt by those who favor the idea that the combined knowledge of a representative group of interested local business men would in all probability serve as a firmer base to work on than the judgment of a single person appointed to do the work.

"On the other hand there are those who feel that nothing can be accomplished without the services of a paid secretary who would devote the full time to the work. It is argued by those who favor this arrangement that the failure of past organizations of this nature lay in the fact that no one person was provided to give the matter their undivided attention and as a result the responsibility was shifted from one to another until eventually the whole scheme fell by the wayside."

NOT TOO SERIOUSLY

The man who takes himself too seriously does get a bit tiring at times. He says himself open to the suspicion, too, that he is just a trifle conscious of the fact that in reality he isn't quite as impressive as he would like to appear. An inferiority sense is a very bad thing to cultivate, by whatever process we may do it, and for our own comfort and moral good health we should seek to check it by all the means possible.

Perhaps the best way to avoid either of these dangerous tendencies, and not to think either too much or too little of ourselves, is to make ourselves as little the centre of our thinking of any kind as is possible. And it may be that the best way to do that is to keep steadily on with our own job, doing it as well as we can and substituting as few comparisons with others and others' ways as is reasonable.

If a man can feel in his own soul that he is just about doing his very best with his abilities and opportunities he can be wholesomely indifferent to outside opinion and judgment and not allow it to affect him, either up or down, too much. And a fair measure of that indifference is good both for his soul and as well as for the work he is doing.

A saving sense of humor is a great bulwark against a man taking himself too seriously, or overestimating his gifts and graces, though how one gets that excellent and most useful virtue, if he doesn't possess it naturally, is very hard to see. Heaven might be willing to listen to a man's prayer asking for it, for heaven must see many tragedies in human lives for want of it.—The New Outlook, Toronto.

YES

How many people have you been
While old years went out and new years came in?
How many selves can you truly say
Made up the self that you are today?
You have been wicked and you have been good,
Caught in strange crises, misunderstood;
You have been idler and toiler both,
Proud of your industry, shamed by your sloth.
Widely experienced you have been wise;
Simple as Adam was in Paradise.
Once a sophisticate, worldly and shrewd,
Suddenly childlike, untutored and crude,
How many people wander now
Back of your smooth, untroubled brow?

EIGHT MILLION DOLLARS in one sale of its goods by a Belleville industry seems to indicate that prosperity has turned the corner at last and is making full speed toward recovery. Yanks know a good thing when they taste it and in gobbling up those million gallons of Corby Canadian whiskey are taking out insurance against a national thirst in a dry drought ourséd land.

SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA anniversary brings the first real acknowledgement from Germany of those who participated in the barbarous deed. Notwithstanding evidence to the effect that the sinking of the great liner was ordered by the Supreme High Command at Berlin and warning advertisements placed in New York newspapers beside private warnings to intending passengers, the latest confession from officers of the U-20 which sank the Lusitania claims that the identity of the great vessel was not known before the torpedoes were launched. It is also admitted that the German submarine did not rise to the surface, but surveyed the scene through the periscope, and satisfied that a complete job had been done, scuttled away under water as fast as its engines would carry it leaving the sea full of drowning people—a total loss of 1,195 lives. That the sinking of the Lusitania with the accompanying loss of life was celebrated in Germany as a great victory and a medal struck to commemorate the event is a painful reminder that all the ancient barbarism and savagery of war can still be awakened in some countries, and the Hun proclivity to frightfulness. Peace on earth and good will to all men of good will has still some distance to go toward universal fulfillment.

HONEST CONFESSION IS GOOD FOR THE SOUL is realized in some sections of the United States, where less is heard of "We won the war" and more of "We bungled the war". Chicago American commenting on the waste and graft and inefficiency in the administration of relief money states with sorrow that this is no new thing for, "we spent a billion on airplanes, practically all wasted, the planes wouldn't fly. We spent another billion on ships that never were launched. We bought for soldiers some forty million pair of shoes—you can guess what the government lost on them."

FORTY THIEVES UP-TO-DATE

Chang, a farmer of Mingkwang, was hopelessly in debt. So he and his wife decided to hold a "banquet of death" and commit suicide.

With great care Chang's wife killed and prepared a chicken, which she proceeded to cook in arsenic, says Reuter.

Just as everything was ready and set upon the table Chang and his wife heard bandits. Frightened, they hid.

The bandits, overjoyed to find a feast prepared, sat down and boisterously ate the whole of the chicken and drank all the wine.

One by one the whole 13 collapsed, groaning in agony.

Soon all the bandits were dead on the floor. Chang and his wife came out of hiding. They searched the bandits and found over $500.

The police have decided that the money belongs to Chang, so his financial troubles are now over.

INNER SEARCH MAY DISCLOSE LATENT POWER

No Mind Has Developed Itself to Its Utmost

By LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D. Famous Authority on Health and Psychology.

Copyright 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Every human being is controlled by his mind—that part of him that comes into contact with the outside world. The mind, we all know, is the organ that tries to conquer all externals and to do the best it can for itself.

No mind, however alert, bright and effective, has developed itself to its utmost. There is a reserve force which the average human being is endowed at birth is a source of undeveloped power which never runs dry. Everybody has within him abilities of which even he is unaware!

In these modern days of science, psychology recognizes these facts and counsels you not to be dismayed, but to search within yourself to find out what you really are or could be.

Remember that your mind increases in efficiency in direct proportion to the equipment accumulated there. You can improve your mind just as methodically and inevitably as an executive can improve his business.

Furthermore, the same mind is not as efficient in one line as it another. The factors which influence the mind in this way are the same as those which are operative in the case of a factory.

In each employee every day's work with the daily task assigned him, the organization as a whole can be fairly efficient. But if each man's employed does his utmost, the sum total is bound to result in maximum efficiency.

In similar fashion, one can say that each brain cell does its work in accordance with the inherent ability it possesses. If the sum total of mental output has possibilities absolutely without limit.

Therefore watch yourself. Study your reactions and note your assets and liabilities. Find what your strength is and what your weaknesses may be. Then try to make every thought and act helpful, uplifting and constructive. Counteract harmful habits and tendencies. Keep working to improve yourself. Don't worry about success and don't fear that you won't be recognized. Make the most of yourself and the rest is easy! You won't have to worry about recognition.

If you are already successful, remember that you may be able to become even more successful. The great, no matter how renowned they were, could have become greater still had they practised what is now be termed "directive psychology."

How are you going to make those brain cells of yours follow your bidding? Will you let them remain inactive, or will you make them better themselves so that you may reach the success and happiness which is rightfully yours?

Send-a-Dame Chain Letter Now in Vogue

Berkeley, Calif., May 13.—(CP)—It's enough to make a girl chew up pencils. This "send-a-dame" chain letter idea at the University of California.

"I don't see where it's going to end," said Miss Mary Kirk, pretty freshman co-ed, as she contemplated today the prospect of being "dated up" for years and years and years.

Miss Kirk's shame appeared on the "send-a-dame" letters at the top of a list of five. Men students receiving the letters were directed to make a "date" with the top girl, scratch her name from the list, add a new one and send copies along to five friends.

"There won't be a dame to spare pretty soon," predicted Eldon Grimm, senior in the College of Commerce, who was credited by the Daily Californian, student newspaper, with originating the idea.

He figures each of the 4,000 co-eds at the University would be "dated" approximately 96,000 times if each of the 10,000 men students co-operated by seeing no link was broken.

NINE INJURED IN HEAD-ONCOLLISION ON FOXBORO ROAD

Those to be detained for further medical treatment in the hospital Sunday were: Leslie Cook, driver of the second car, and James Clifford, 15, also of Cooper, who was riding with Cook. Mrs. Forsyth, driver of the north-bound car and Mrs. Austin, a passenger in the Forsyth automobile. Mrs. Austin, Springbrook, sustained the greater injuries as she received head and leg lacerations, from the result of flying glass, while all of her lower teeth were knocked out, when her face crashed against the front seat of the vehicle at the time of the impact. Mrs. B. Mickillen and Mr. C. Braun were also passengers in the Forsyth car and sustained cuts and bruises requiring medical attention. Other passengers in the Cook driven auto to sustain lacerations were Rose Hamiff, 1, Harold Whiteman, 32, Jean Whiteman, 13 and Mary Cook, 14. The majority of the injuries sustained resulted from cuts and lacerations about the head, arms and legs.

Two Ambulances at Scene

Two ambulances, the city and Masters', were needed to rush the injured persons to the hospital, while Dr. Crook attended the injured at the scene of the accident and transported four to the institution in his motor car. The injured were received at the hospital and medically examined by Drs. S. G. Crook and W. C. Morgan. According to Traffic Officers Ervine and Ryan, who investigated and assisted at the scene of the accident, the crash was the worst seen here this year. The screams of those thrown from the vehicles as they crashed head-on aroused nearby residents, who notified the police and also assisted in the matter of rendering first aid.

Cars Wrecked

The motor cars are both completely wrecked with windshields, windows, fenders, wheels and radiators all being broken or badly damaged. The wrecked cars were removed to local garages early Sunday morning. The report of the accident soon reached the city at midnight Saturday and a large number of spectators hurried to the scene in the hope of rubber possible. Bloodstains were distinctly noticeable on the scene of the wreck as late as Sunday afternoon, indicating that a considerable amount of blood had been lost by those injured.

All of the passengers in the Forsyth driven car were residents of Springbrook while those in the Cook car came from Cooper.

Following a conference between Crown Attorney R. J. Donnan, K.C. and Traffic Officer Ervine early today a charge of driving while drunk was laid against Mrs. Forsyth while Cook was also charged with driving a motor car without having obtained a driver's license.

According to the police Cook was driving on his own side of the road just prior to the accident while Mrs. Forsyth is alleged to have been proceeding along the west side of the highway.

Pilsudski's death occurred on the ninth anniversary of the 1926 coup which brought him the powers of a dictator.

(By Harold P. Braman)

London, May 13.—(AP)—Diplomatic circles were uneasy today over the death of Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, Polish dictator, seeing the possibility of new frontier difficulties between Poland and Germany with a resultant realignment of political relationships throughout Europe.

Some quarters believe Reichsfuehrer Hitler may be less hesitant now in pushing the Pomorne (Polish corridor) question than when the powerful Marshal was alive, few diplomats believe Poland will be able to continue balancing the friendships of Germany and France. There is also a contention internal political rivalries which the dictator smothered may soon flare up.

The Late Baby Joseph Edward Payette

"Joseph Edward, year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Payette, passed away last Friday after a brief illness. The funeral was held privately at his late residence on Monday with interment in the Catholic cemetery. Rev. Father Buckley conducted the services.

Mrs. George A. White

Word was received in town Friday night of the passing of Mrs. Traills White, wife of George A. White, in Toronto. Just two weeks ago on April 26, Mr. and Mrs. White celebrated their fifty-eighth wedding anniversary. Mrs. White had journeyed to Toronto for medical treatment but her death came as a great shock to her many friends in Trenton. Mrs. White was born in Murray Township eighty years ago, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Meyers. She resided in Trenton as a girl but had lived in Toronto since her marriage. During the war she took an active part in the work of the I.O.D.E. of which she was a life member. She travelled extensively and had crossed the Atlantic no less than fourteen times. Last January their home "Woodleigh" was burned and many valuables that Mrs. White had gathered were destroyed.

She leaves to mourn her passing, her husband and two sons, Clen of Timmons, and Douglas of Lexington, Ky. The funeral was held in Toronto.

HOWARD PERRY, HAMEL BENN OF NAPANEE QUIZZED

ing to Bero the hit and run car was travelling at an excessive speed, according to witnesses. The vehicle continued on its way eastward after it struck the highway on a side street in Deseronto, eye witnesses stated.

Bero was first reported to be in a critical condition, but following a 24-hour rest in the hospital, his condition was reported to be favourable today however. Charges of the negligent operation of a motor car causing grievous bodily harm were laid against each occupant of the car since the police have not actually ascertained who was the driver of the vehicle at the time of the accident.

When Chief Constable Frank Smith visited Crown Attorney R. J. Donnan, K.C., today in relationship to the matter the former stated that Bero had denied driving the car at the time of the accident. According to Chief Smith, Benn informed him, when he was arrested in his bed on Saturday night, that he had loaned his automobile to Perry and was ignorant of the entire affair. Perry, however, refused to make a statement to the police.

Following the conference between Crown Attorney Donnan and Chief Smith, the former announced that the matter of possible bail would be left in abeyance until the matter was thoroughly probed. "This is a very serious matter and demands undivided attention as this case of negligent driving and more especially the question of a serious matter and as hit and run drivers must be curbed," stated Mr. Donnan.

70TH ANNIVERSARY OF CHRIST CHURCH IS CELEBRATED

Archdeacon R. C. Blagrave, Former Rector, Is Preacher

LARGE CONGREGATIONS

Tribute Paid to Founders and Early Members of the Parish

Thirty years of the seventy years during which Christ Church parish has existed is represented by the three former rectors who took charge of the services for the three Sundays of the anniversary celebrations during May. On Sunday, Rev. Dr. R. C. Blagrave, archdeacon of Peterborough and rector of St. John's, Peterborough, who came to this parish in 1905 and remained for thirteen and a half years began the celebration of the anniversary of the founding of the parish. On Sunday next Rev. O. R. Clarke of St. Michael and All Angels, Toronto, will be the special preacher and will officiate at the usual 11 o'clock communion service in the morning. On the next Sunday, May 26, Rural Dean W. G. Swayne of Bowdon will conduct the morning service and it is expected that His Lordship Bishop Lyons will close the anniversary ceremonies at evensong on that day.

Large Congregations

Crowded congregations greeted Archdeacon Blagrave and both his sermons rich with deep feeling to the happy occasion of his rectorship of Christ Church and to his joy at returning to take part in the anniversary. In the morning he said, "It is a genuine pleasure and privilege to be here on this seventieth anniversary of the parish and congregation. It is a great delight to know the spirit that is in this church and to know of its continued success.

"On anniversaries of this kind one is constrained to look backwards. I just want to have a chat with you about the church. I am not just like one coming to preach an anniversary sermon, but come as one, and spend his early years and probably his best years of his life here, and so cannot but feel the memories which cluster about the church and the experiences of those thirteen and a half years. Thirty years ago there here and it is seventeen years since I left. Quite a few in this church today were born when I was here. And certainly there were many who were not born when I came to Belleville. But then and now it is interesting to see so many young people in this congregation for in them is the hope of the future. Still we want the mellow experience of the older constantly to hallow the Church of God".

What is Religion?

Dr. Blagrave turned to the subject of religion. He said he was not referring to the mere restlessness which every person feels at some time for betterment for that at best is religion only in its incipient state. "Nor do I mean by religion just following the moral code. Even pagans do that. Religion is a fellowship with God. We must do the thing, not merely think it and wish it. We must do it for Christ's sake and for God's sake.

"Many persons go about and say that religion is worse than it used to be. There never was a time when people so wanted religion to live—while nations are claiming that there is no God and there is a homecoming influence in the attempt to destroy religion. And it is time to find a firm foundation.

A Difficult Thing

"Religion is a difficult thing. I often wonder if it is so strong as it is, because it is a very troublesome thing. Among other things, spending things, it spoils a lot of fun—the lower king of fun. It is a troublesome thing—it runs counter to our desires, always holding us back from what we want to do. I am sure on Sundays if we have a conscience and want to be honest with Him and about the country. It is a wonder that men have not risen up against it, but the amazing thing is that, 'I think religion is as strong as it was twenty-five years ago. Religion has its hold upon us because it is of God."

The preacher referred to permanent temptations such as to doubt of God in the presence of pain and death. God, he said, cares for the sparrow, knows when the leaf falls in the autumn and men ask if God cares when a child or a relative is taken, rather that we that God had taken my loved ones than that they had been taken by chance—and feel that there is beyond One who loves. This is the kind of world we are born into. Some of us think we are not born into it and in the days of suffering we think of life as everlasting but bye and bye we come to know that it is not. God is absolute, a saving God, a loving God.

"Need of Dynamic"

"We must turn our religion into a dynamic, moving thing by belonging to the church and to a particular congregation. Never was there such a thing as being a Christian and living apart from organized Christianity. The Apostles sacrificed all for the common good because they had seen the risen Christ. We must try to love one another more, sympathize must not envy spite, envy, jealousy which are all perverted qualities. Bishop Sills once said, "There are people reading you and me who will never read their Bibles'. Your fairness, your love of right, your love of truth, your love of love, let them see".

At evensong Dr. Blagrave referred to the fact that he had been rector of Christ Church for the longest time of all the rectors of the parish. He paid tribute to old friendships, and called friendship-making the greatest thing in life, a precious jewel."

Mindful of Past

"We must never be unmindful of our past," he warned, "I can only think of the human family as being of long development. Young people must not think that customs made out of date because they would not be here were in not for those who have been before them."

The archdeacon pointed out that one member of the parish who was present when the church was opened seventy years ago was present at the morning service Miss Herbert.

Dr. Blagrave spoke on the church as a sanctuary the temple to which men and women may flee from the world where all human life is sacred, where one may come for comfort and where life is lived in the light of heavy, remember that the Holy Ghost is there. The trouble is we are trying to go our restless unreverent ways alone, when Gods wants us to come to Him with all our trials and burdens of life."

It was in 1905 that the first Christ Church was opened. It was situated along the Moira River not far from the upper bridge. That church was destroyed by fire and the present church was erected on the new site opposite the footbridge.

The first rector of the church was Rev. Septimus Jones who in 1874 became the rector of the Church of the Redeemer Avenue Road and Bloor Street Toronto.

Rev. G. O. Wright of Christ Church preached in St. John's Peterborough, on Sunday.

Asked to Elope Angela Joyce Testifies in Suit

London, May 13 (AP)—Angela Joyce, "Miss England of 1930," testified today in the $100,000 breach of promise suit against Lord Revelstoke, the wealthy young banker several times asked her to elope with him "and it was perfectly willing."

The pretty blonde, who said Revelstoke called her "Freckles" and "Sunshine," told how he testified the young nobleman told her his father was opposed to their association and threatened to disinherit his son.

Miss Joyce said Lord Revelstoke never gave her any presents and told her on one time they were being watched by private detectives. She said he "forgave" her for her affair with papers, including some of the young lord's letters, were taken.

The reading of a telegram from Lord Revelstoke to Miss Joyce asking her to send him a cable if she were gave a sensational zendoff to the resumption of the heart balm suit which the actress has brought against the nobleman. No specific sum has been mentioned.

"I sent him a kiss by the boney," said the telegram, which Joyce's attorney introduced. "My heart's on fire. Kisses and love. Signed Robin."

Fervent Letters Revealed

More letters filled with fervent expressions of love were also entered in the court record at the behest of the actress' counsel.

"Darling, I shall adore and love you forever and forever for paying me the great compliment of my life," one read. "Oh, I am flying so high—so high that every time that I see you I feel that I've reached the top.

"I am crying, praying and loving you every second of my life," read the postscript of another letter.

Meylah Mae, Miss Joyce's attorney, said after Lord Revelstoke's father found a photograph of the young woman in a letter from her he laid down the law to his son so completely the young nobleman "fainted with nervous excitement."

The lawyer then continued with his letter reading, presenting another missive, which said:

"I wish I could remember my dreams in the morning as I know they must be about you."

Another told "Darling Angles," that there were no words than can possibly express my love for you and it amongs me to think that I cannot do so.

Under cross-examination, Miss Joyce emphatically denied she brought the suit for publicity.

"I brought it for damages, for reparations," she asserted.

She said she met Lord Revelstoke at Ascot, declaring each one of hers was "every bit as ardent" as his.

Let's Get Married

Their acquaintanceship was temporarily broken off in 1931, Miss Joyce related, to be resumed in 1932.

She described how Lord Revelstoke, in her bedroom, where she said she had taken him clothes she was to wear in a play, "again asked me to marry him." She quoted him here, as saying:

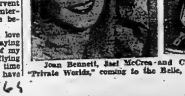
"Let's get married, Angela. I can do what I like now."

Miss Joyce, who broke into tears at one point in her testimony, spent 90 minutes on the stand. She was most emphatic in her denial the suit was brought for publicity purposes.

Declaring she filled the action "for damages", the actress said, "I would have been Lady Revelstoke and I suffered mental torture then. I broke down and could not work."



The defence attorney asked her why she posed at Hollywood for a photograph showing her holding a picture of Lord Revelstoke.

"I wanted people to know he had promised to marry me," she replied, "that he had not kept his promise that he was to be mine."

How a Pale, Run-down Girl Became Positively PRETTY

In a Canadian city a certain girl consulted an authority who examined her, weighed her and tested a sample of her blood. The test showed the haemoglobin in her blood to be only 68% instead of the normal 90% to 95% for a healthy girl. Her weight was 91½ pounds. With her blood testing only 68% haemoglobin, it was only natural for this young woman to be pale and colorless, and lacking in pep and energy, because haemoglobin is not only the coloring material in the blood, it is also the iron compound that carries the vitalizing, energizing oxygen from the lungs to every organ and tissue of the body.

What Her Advisor Told Her To Do

The authority instructed the girl to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (called pink because they have a pink sugar coating) three times a day for a month and not to accept substitutes. He knew the formula for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and recognized their value and safety.

One month later this patient's blood had been so greatly enriched that the haemoglobin had increased 32%. Her weight had increased to 100½ pounds —a nine-pound gain. In the words of her advisor, "She had a lot more color, her face had rounded out and she was positively pretty". Her complexion had the glow caused by rich, red, healthy blood. She was revitalized and strengthened with new access of vigor and energy, and appeared just the picture attractive as the girl whose photo is shown above.

LORD REVELSTOKE

The young lady on the LEFT, known as Angela Joyce, but shortened Ivy Dawkins was according to letters read in London court and alleged to have been written by the young man ABOVE, Lord Revelstoke, "the uncrowned, superlative, sublimest girl in the world". But the young scion of the famous Hoggish banking house of Baring Brothers, London, is not of the same opinion now and Miss Joyce has hailed him into court to defend a breach of promise action. Miss Joyce, a few years ago, won the title of "Miss England" in a beauty contest, went to Hollywood, but doesn't seem to have "clicked," there, as yet.

TORONTO MINES CLOSE

Toronto, May 13.—(CP)—Hollinger and Siscoe were sold for stellar industrial recession part of which were made up later. Hollinger closed $15.85 but recovered to the $16 for a small net loss. Siscoe at 2.95 was off 18 but the close was around 2.90. San Antonio approached 3.70 and Little Long Lac, God's Lake and Sherritt Gordon at Cove closed firm to strong.

Sherritt Gordon was pushed up about 5 cents. Normada closed above 940 and small gains were registered for Base Metals Corporation, Hudson Bay and Mining Corporation.

Silver issues developed few price changes. Peterson-Obaid sold off a fraction. Eldorado 7 and Castle four.

The Golds developed a weak streak on the Mining Section today as a result of the disappointing decision for bar gold in London. Siscoe, Hollinger and Little Long Lac were sold quite actively at lower prices, Hollinger touching $15.65, a new low record for the year. Base Metals were strong and Silvers and Oils fast holding.

A stronger price for Bar Silver failed to impart much strength to the silver shares, the market apparently preferring to await Secretary Morgenthau's speech later on this day on the U. S. Monetary plan.

In the Base Metal group higher prices ruled for Sherritt, Base Metals Corporation and Mining Corporation with the heavy action appearing in Sherritt.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, May 13 (AP)— After showing a decided irregularity in early dealings and absorbing considerable profit taking, the stock market rallied in the afternoon under the leadership of the motors and scattered industrial specialties and a moderate broadened on the recovery.

American Crystal Sugar preferred was a star performer with a gain of over eight points. Canadian-American Sugar preferred was also up three. General Motors and Chrysler moved up fractionally and made a point on heavy buying. Air reduction advanced four points and Gas and American Telephone sagged. The tide was generally irregular. Transfers approximated 1,250,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, May 13 (CP)—International Petroleum touched 38½ before selling back close to 37 for a net gain of a point. Gains in the industrial finished the day with about a point being the usual. Canada Bread lost a fraction.

Mackay 80 and Steelers 164½; but they they eased back to nose out with narrow gains. Brazilian gained a fraction. Bell a half point and Gen. E. added a smaller fraction.

Banks were the chief point were registered for Walkers Common, Distillers Seagrams and Industrial Alcohol "A".

Continuing their strong advance, Colonial Steel Petroleum and Imperial Oil registered new highs for the year today, Imperial was the last one to push to sell as high as 38½ while Imperial advanced to 30 up ¼. The rest of the list lagged and over the board, aside from the oils and the metals, there was a general deceleration of strength.

Liquor stocks were hit by a report that U. S. Government representatives were in Ottawa in connection with the exchange of notes between Canadian distillery firms on an allegation that they illegally marketed liquor in the U. S. during the prohibition days. Walkers Common lost a point and Distillers-Seagrams and Industrial Alcohol "A" was down ¾ each. Walkers rallied the loss in the afternoon.

Silver "A", Bell Telephone and Goodyear Preferred were off while the food and steel issues improved.

"The Fountain"

Gives Ann Harding Role Full of Emotion

"The Fountain," currently the attraction at the Capitol Theatre, Bridge Town, is the story of the life history as another Ann Harding triumph. Miss Harding's performance at success in "Holiday" has the talented star had such an opportunity to display the range of her remarkable dramatic ability and synchronized interpretation. Miss Harding is Countess Von Marwitz, a victim of a loveless marriage, she finds herself in the enchantment of high spiritual quality who has a gigantic struggle with the forces of human nature.

Interned in Holland she chances to meet an English aviator, a former childhood sweetheart who is now a British army officer, in at the front. Thrown into daily association, they become part of her erstwhile romance rekindled. A crisis comes when her husband returns as a war cripple and discovers the situation. His nobility in accepting the unselfish forgiving nature to stifle her love for the other man, though it breaks her heart, makes the picture is finally penetrated makes for a poignant climax. Miss Harding delivers a most sympathetic performance, holding her audience spellbound.

Opposite Miss Harding the two male roles are portrayed by Brian Aherne, English star who is seen as the British aviator, and Paul Lukas as the philosophical forgiving husband. Both men contributing performances that are outstanding in their delicate characterization and understanding.

"Private Worlds"

Drama of Great Book, New Colbert Film Story

A sterling cast, a vivid enthralling story and direction have been assembled in Paramount's "Private Worlds", coming to the Regent Theatre in the form of this psychological love drama a story of compelling interest and wide appeal.

The glamorous Claudette Colbert, winner of the Academy award in 1934, heads the cast of "Private Worlds" in the character of a woman who seeks refuge from fear in the memory of a dead sweetheart. Charles Boyer, as Miss Colbert's lawyer and her colleague, a man who has been taught to hate women by the treachery of his own sister. Joan Bennett, Joel McCrea and Helen Mack are in the supporting cast.

"Private Worlds", which was adapted from the best-selling novel by Phyllis Bottome, is set in the unusual surroundings of a sanitarium for the insane, where Miss Colbert, McCrea and Miss Bennett labor. Despite their insight into the ills of the human mind, Colbert and Boyer are helpless when they fall in love with each other. Complicating the situation is the arrival of Miss Colbert's sister, Joan Bennett, Joel McCrea and Helen Mack are in the supporting cast.

Roy 'Bud' Parmelee of Giants Heads National Hurling Corps With Four Straight Victories

All First Division Clubs Win Sunday Over Rivals

BROWNS ADVANCE

Hornsby's Pinch Double Wins For Team Over Boston

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr.)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

If New York Giants are sulking about at the top of the National League standing at an even better clip than they hit early last season, Roy "Bud" Parmelee can furnish the explanation.

The righthanded fireball thrower from Lambertville, Mich., couldn't help much with the rest of the "big four" last season, winning only 10 games and losing 9, but hurling only seven complete games out of 19 starts. This year he has been a great start to rise to the top of the new "Big Four" which includes Young, Cyclone Castleman.

After failing to finish his first assignment, which ended in a tie, Parmelee has reeled up four straight victories and now is tied for head of the National League pitching corps with a quartet of 4-0 performances as a pitcher could perfectly desire to accomplish. In those four games he has allowed only nine hits and 17 hits, turning in two three-hit games and one four-hitter.

Only a streak of wildness—slight in comparison with some he used to have—marred Roy's performance in which Roy Parmelee issued only three walks to win 3-1. He tossed seven shutout innings with only two hits, one a double and the only Pittsburg run by passing pinch hitter Red Lucas after hits by the two Waners and a walk had crammed the corners.

In addition to his pitching, Parmelee scored the first Giant run after smashing a double in the fifth. The other two tallies came home in the next inning, aided by a pair of stolen bases.

Can't Shake Rivals

Despite the victory, the Giants couldn't shake off their rivals from across the river, Brooklyn Dodgers, who clung to their place a game and a half behind by trimming the Reds 9-1 as Van Mungo chalked up his fifth round victory. Sam Leslie provided some late slugging for Mungo by smacking four straight hits which netted him four runs batted in.

Third-place Cubs also got the benefit of some good elbowing to whip Boston 5-3. Lon Warneke made himself almost the whole show by limiting the Braves to five hits, fanning six and smacking four singles for a three-base clout at the plate.

The Cardinals completed the triumph of the first three over the second by belting out a 10-5 decision over the Phillies in a game which saw the teams divide 32 hits. Phil Cavarretta, starting first Cardinals start, managed to beat his old mates although he didn't last the route while Curt Davis, back in action after nearly a month's layoff was knocked out early.

St. Louis Browns finally climbed out of the American League cellar by beating out the Red Sox 3-2, while the other Washington-Philadelphia clubs were kept idle by rain. The victory, largely possible through Manager Rogers Hornsby's pinch double in the seventh put the Browns a half game ahead of the Athletics.

BEARS WIN TWO

Hold Fall Game Lead Over the Toronto Maple Leafs

(By the Associated Press)

The Eastern Canada League's first full Sunday found the grid season benefiting only to the extent of giving Newark Bears.

While the other three battle-drills were held in rain-spells, the Bears rolled over Syracuse, 6-4 and 6-0, to increase their lead over the second place Leafs, who lost a double fall game.

The Bears had to fight hard for the first game but Rochester held a 6-3 lead after seven innings. Then Bill Schabb, pitcher, Hank Ward suddenly weakened and Newark pushed across three runs, two of them riding home on Ernie Koy's home run.

Koy was setting for a fine pitching performance by Clint Brown, when Syracuse filled the bases and broke into scoreless all the way. He allowed only eight hits and struck out widely spaced. Newark made only nine safeties, and Syracuse's infield had bunched them in two innings for all their runs. Koy who made three hits in the first game, batted in three runs in the night game and then saw in the night game and then saw in the night game two long homers for the day.

Failed to Touch Runner

The largest crowd—12,000— that ever saw a pro football game in Canada, jammed Varsity Stadium to see the Cleveli while Toronto Maple Leafs failed to score in the game and then take a 3-1 beating in the night game. Syracuse took the opener on a two-run rally in the ninth but had to battle desperately from Milt Trask, Toronto catcher. With the score tied at 3-3 during the fifth Graham Cassidy, Cleveland who touched first and then fired the ball to Second Baseman Fay who made a home play, nearly touched home plate and Wyatt Skreenock, Syracuse pitcher, crossed the scoring mark. The protest at first, of course, had been overruled by the umpire the force play at home. Toronto won the game on a two-run single driven in after a sacrifice, a base on balls and an error by Jimmy Powers, Leaf hurler.

Montreal's Royals remained in third place, a game with Albany before a crowd of 12,000.

Rochester Tridents, Orioles collected 19 hits to down Buffalo Bisons 11-10. The game was played on the second game 3-2 behind Bill Lee. Buffalo's Bisons

Daily Short Story

To A Man's Heart

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

George Manson reached the curb and looked up. It was a busy street and he waited for the light to change so pedestrians could cross. As he looked up, he heard something drop alongside him. He turned about.

A middle-aged woman was experiencing difficulties balancing a great many packages in her arms. She had dropped in the pavement. George bent down and picked it up.

"May I help you across?" he said, in a sudden mood of chivalry. She nodded assent. While crossing he removed a few more packages from her arms.

"How far do you live from here?" he asked.

"Two blocks," she replied.

"Do you mind having an escort?" he laughed.

Again she nodded assent and both proceeded toward her home. The woman explained, there for a surprise party that was being planned for a niece of hers—for the latter's birthday.

"May I know at least the name of my benefactor?" she asked.

He gave her his name and address, then asked why she was going to obtain it.

"I thought you might care to attend the party," she laughed.

The Party

George attended the party. A number of friends were gathered at the home of Mrs. Evelyn Burnett of diverse ages and appearances. They were practically all relatives. He got a good introduction to the niece—Bernice Burnett. Bernice, it was explained, was the daughter of the late Mr. Burnett's brother—and she was Mrs. Burnett's sole relative. From which he gathered that Mrs. Burnett was a widow and had been left childless.

George was not disappointed in Bernice. She had the classic features. He had gone there almost as one goes to a blind date expecting the worst. She was a slim brunette with lively eyes and an engaging smile.

"I get my aunt invited you here you should meet me," she remarked. "You don't know what an intriguing woman she is. She missed her profession. She should have been a marriage-broker. She thinks she knows all husband for me through the stomach."

"Does she find you so hard to suit, dear?" George replied. "It doesn't seem to me as if the job should be so hard."

"That's the flattering answer I should expect," she said, "as it happens I don't feel I'm in the market, but I can't convince her of it."

George looked at her flashing eyes and wondered, after all, she was setting no trap for him.

"However", she continued, "I would advise you to accompany my aunt's parties. She's the spreader and in the world, and I'd walk round the world for one of her cookies."

"Maybe my dad would be interested," he laughed. "At his age he likes his food cooked well."

The conversation would have been forgotten by George as all other fleeting frogments that are possessed at parties. But within a fortnight he received another invitation. It was to a party that was being given by Bernice in her aunt's birthday, and the invitation also included his father. And George accepted it. He thought it would be fun and persuaded his dad to come along.

The dinner was as tasty as the previous one and George decided it was time for a little subterfuge.

Aunt is Upset

"Marvelous," he remarked to Bernice, "in giving the party and my aunt is the queen of hospit But you don't think she'll trust me with the cooking."

The elder Manson who had enjoyed it hugely and was now smoking his favorite brand of cigar, interrupted reminiscently:

"Book cooking reminds me of my late wife——"

George whispered to Bernice:

"Mother has been gone ten years, but he still remembers her in his heart."

A month later, George received a summons from Bernice to meet her. He did.

"Guess we'll have to get another party up," remarked Bernice.

"What for?" he asked.

"Don't you know," she replied. "My aunt and your dad. Instead of her being the marriage broker—as did it. He's only wondering about you. How you would feel."

George became serious. "To tell the truth, I didn't expect it. But I guess he has been pretty lonesome all these years. And if there is any question—certainly, he could make no better choice...."

They spent silent for a minute. "How about you," he added, "what are your plans?"

"I—I have to learn to cook first," she replied, "will you give me time?...."

Little Benny's Note Book

I was laying on the living room floor reading Paul Poppy in India and wishing it wasn't time to go to bed, and ma said, Benny, for the last and last time, do you realize you should of been in bed it eleven o'clock ago?

Aw G, ma, gosh cant I just finish the book first to keep myself from playing awake wondering how it ended? I said, and ma said, most sarcastically not, and please dont let me hear any more unless you want your father to take a deciding hand in the discussion.

Benny, pop said, and I said, Yes sir, yes mam.

And I went to bed, excidently taking the book with me, and I was laying there reading it amidst 2 pillows and all of a sudden somebody opened my door. Being me, I saying, So, you've finally decided to finish it, I was just going to read as far as the middle of the last page and then stop, I said, and ma crisply put out my life, saying, Now leave it out.

Which I did cuz I had a idear and I got my flashlite out of my desk drawer and started to keep on reading with my thumb on the button to keep the light on, and the door opened again and who was it but ma, me quick saying, You told me to leave it out, and ma said, Im on again, me, and neither I didnt.

Give me that flashlite and dont let me any life of any nature whatsoever under any circumstances, ma said.

And she went out with my flashlite, and I layed there a while looking at the moon. Going like saying from Bonner Here, and I didn't turn that on. And I got up and read by the moonlite leaving part ways out the window till I got to the next to the last line on the last page, and then I shut the book and went to sleep with a clear conscience.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED—

Lieutenant Roger Cecil, Royal Air Service, for it was he who now watched Tarzan's returning consciousness, had been the cannibals' prisoner for some weeks. Unknown to him, they were trying to fatten Roger for a feast. Then Tarzan's ill-luck brought him, too, into their fiendish clutches.

Through the long nights of his imprisonment, Roger was left alone. Then his thoughts were often of the circumstances which brought about his capture. He was certain his flying career—and his life—were doomed. "What beastly luck!" he thought.

"what luck to die this way, after the narrow escapes I've come through!" Many a previous aircraft has he survived. He thought of that war in the India mountains when to save Patricia Cabby the girl he loved, he had made her jump with a parachute from his burning plane.

Roger remembered how he and his crew had leaped overboard, attempting to save their plane. How he at last, bruised and battered, landed in a treetop. He recalled vividly the events that followed. He had not known where he was.

TANGLED LIVES

BROWNING IN MONEY
CHAPTER 11

"So you are going to play with Nadine until you get settled."

Jeff Thorrald had come back from the Observation car and had found Jack Reid and Joyce, Nadine and Len Bates were in animated conversation with an ex-Parisienne further down the car.

Joyce was a trifle, "Oh no! I wouldn't dream of imposing on her to that extent!" she said quickly. Miss Cheyne was kind enough to say she would try to find some room for me."

She was sorry because she felt herself floating.

The man's eyes were wandering over her deliberately. Lovely thing she was...she had more than she had that indescribable charm of youth and the beauty of youth.... which raises a beautiful woman from merely a pretty one. Gad, couldn't she run a knockout for mounting dives! Jude, say—er, better still with her skirt and hair, a deep sailor suits with a necklace of beryl. Or black velvet and crystals.....

The man's prominent black eyes were half closed, contemplating the vision, something of an artist and a creator, the strange Jeff Thorrald....he delighted in lovely ornamental subjects—particularly if these subjects were women.

But his voice was carefully indifferent when he replied: "No? Better take advantage of Nadine's unusual generosity! She must have taken a deep liking to you to give beautiful women she's usually rather indifferent. You shouldn't curb such lovely and—unexpected sprouts of Nadine's good impulses."

All of this with such a lazy laughter note that the girl was at a loss. She felt naive, a little at a disadvantage. An instinctive reserve was holding her back from these obviously friendly advances. How she wondered if she should accept appreciate and accredited. It was unprecedented to misinterpret all friendly advances.

As she came out into the rear of the train before the railway station, Joyce felt very small and bewildered. She was suddenly grateful for the presence of Nadine and the two men.

Jeff Thorrald's dark face was smiling down into her own.

"You going to see me again, Miss Allen?" he asked in the gentle tone which contrasted so oddly with his appearance.

"I'm going to take Joyce to my apartment," Nadine declared, "And thrust one slim arm under Joyce's elbow.

"Len and I will go on direct to the office. I'm anxious to see what's doing there. We'll meet you a little way up town."

There was uneasiness in Joyce's timid crumbled. She was ashamed of her overwhelming doubts as Nadine signalled to a cab after saying goodbye to the two men.

It was a strange dream, to be, sitting here in the taxi as it bounded its way through the early morning traffic. The city was slightly dazzling even so early. The buildings with the early morning sunlight gilding their upper stories.

The sensation crowds on the sidewalks rushing to the daily job — Men, middle-aged, young men — and slightly trim girls with cool self possession....the dewy roar of the city traffic pierced by shrill whistles.

A long way from the white dust and respite of Main Street. A long way from the shabby Commercial House. Already Joyce seemed looking back on all this down a vista of years. She had stood at the cross roads yesterday. It was that short crossroads of old Queen and Cameron which had turned her impulsively town this path—which was leading, where?

Nadine was chattering about hers mates offices. Oh, then it seemed that Jeff Thorrald was the sales manager of a big bond house. He was the son of his salesmen. They had been out to town on a deal. Nadine had been to visit friends in the same town. Wasn't it odd that they had met on the train? Didn't it seem like fate intended it?..

Joyce listened with her outer ears made the correct answers in the correct places, but her real self was shaken and trembling—over awed by this tremendous city.

Nadine was then her knee or slightly—had taken on the aspect of an old friend. Joyce felt a warm little rush of gratitude.....

All of this, drifting like dark stolen drives clouds through her mind as they stopped before the massive entrance to the apartment house.

A commissaire place, after the commercial House. Joyce as she followed Nadine into the lobby carpeted lobby where a gally uniformed West Indian boy operated the elevator, hoped that her rumpled embarrassment did not show on her face.

Nadine's apartment was furnished with none of the chaste stylishness of her clothes.

The floors were too polished, the rugs too thick, the furniture was too softly upholstered and there was too much of it. A couch as barricaded as a sultan's dream. Immense easy chairs, lamps. Great puffy cushions scattered around on the floor. Elaborate ash trays, crowded with cigarette stubs. Magazines and newspapers, some of the latest, Tapestries and wall hangings that were each other on the wall until the mind grasped for a cool cave spot.

They were greeted by a thin silent negress of middle age, whom Nadine called Lousy' Mae and ordered to prepare breakfast.

The bedroom was a bower of amber satin. The bed, a curved and gilded affair, was spread with a satin drape and heaped with innumerable little lace and taffeta cushions. The dressing table was petticoated in the same pale satin. Long legged French dolls, with bouffant skirts and lascivious simpers painted on their satin faces were scattered on the bed among the pillows on the daybed, floor, on chairs and footstools. One trod on a pale amber Chinese rug and fell into one was drowning in honey.

Despite the shabby Commercial House—maybe even Mrs. Slade's penury, Joyce was not unsophisticated. The modern pictures, radio, magazines, had attended to that. Not to be suddenly flung in into mysterious luxury without being overwhelmed her.

She felt dazed as she removed her hat and coat. Her strongest impression, strange at the sight of her own suitcase. It had belonged to her mother—that suitcase, and its youth was lost in the mists of authority. A shabby and slightly lopsided intruder, it seemed, standing beside Nadine's aristocratic fitted bag.

A moment or even hoever embarrassment—when Nadine flung her a negligee. "Take off your dress and make yourself comfortable ; while we're eating breakfast." Joyce's rayon underthings—even those, her most precious best set, carefully "pinked" and ironed by her own hands, looked unutterably shabby crumpled contrasted to the expensive softness of silk and lace which Nadine wore.

Obediently Joyce wrapped herself in the satin negligee and followed her hostess to the breakfast alcove where again she was overcome by the coffee.

She ate all part of the strange dream which had started yesterday.

COMPROMISE

Sun dazzling in to sparkle on glass and silver....glimpses of the white embroidered cloth...falling on long grapefruit, poached eggs, hot muffins, steaming coffee faultlessly served by the silent Lousy-Mae.

Impossible, thought Joyce, that the same world could hold the dingy kitchen of the Commercial House—Aunt Clara's complaints, Kirsh gruel.

That was a dream—vanished like yesterday. Or was this the dream? Was she awake to be living the Riverton hotel? To the humility of being fitted for Norman.....

In this strong light, Nadine seemed older than she did on the train. There were fahnl lines etched about her mouth and eyes. The slightest crepey look to her white throat. She frankly smothered a yawn, patting it back with one hand—muttered hazily.

"Im dead, Joyce! I never sleep well on trains and I've got in such an ungodly hour! Suppose we each take a little nap."

The girl hesitated. "Don't you think I should see Madame Estelle as soon as possible?"

"Madame Estelle!" Nadine's big eyes were blank.

"About work, you know."

"Oh!" Nadine reached over and took a muffin. She crumbled it between her long white fingers. "Oh, then, you can't be very early. Everybody knows. She's always up to her ears at this time of the day. We'll go down this afternoon."

Joyce bit her lower lip. Of course she appreciated Nadine's offer—but how necessary it was that she get started at once, find a place to live. Jeff Thorrald was right—Nadine was Spoiled-self centered...and, since she was great, Joyce couldn't blame her.

"I'm awfully anxious to get settled—you know—" she said slowly.

"Oh dear, you're going to be looked after!" Nadine's voice was warm. "We'll go see Madame Estelle this afternoon and get you fixed up in a place to stay—there's no hurry. You don't have to worry over that—I'll see you your way clear to move—"

In the face of such cordiality, Joyce could only murmur her gratitude. Her peach colored draperies were soft and warm in the sunlight. She sleepily urged Joyce to lie down on the daybed.

Instead Joyce went into the living room and took up a magazine. A fashion magazine. Nadine's apartment. But Joyce's eyes were on the willowy ladies with the darkened eyelids that posed on the page. She stared around at the astonishing room. Lovely exotic things...She remembered her own room at home—that some day she would own such things.

Was it only yesterday that she had said that while Maddy sat in the chair out at the Commercial House and sewed on her pink dress?

What was Maddy thinking now? What was Norman thinking? How could they know? His could charge like this overnight. Instead of Norman—Indeed all the people she had known all her life, she had only Nadine now. Nadine—and Len Bates and Jeff Thorrald.

Joyce found that she had heaped the ash tray beside her chair and the rug wearing a zigag course from the couch to the radio—turning from station to station for some sort of combinch. Vague uneasiness growing in her heart. She tried to analyze it. She had been in harness so long that she was restless when she was free. She was getting like poor Aunt Clara, who would probably heed over some day before her broken Kaleidoscope. Bewildering colorful, breath taking days. Days the more exciting because of the faint sense of excited disapproval in her own heart. Joyce was part of the dazzle and the pattern.

It had started that first night when Jeff Thorrald had gone out to dinner with Len Bates and Jeff Thorrald. After that they had gone to the theater, then to a night club where they had danced—grunted Joyce's only when the doorman had recognized Jeff Thorrald.

Naturally Len Bates had given most of his attention to Nadine, which left Jeff's undivided attention to Joyce. Flattering, to have this man so obviously attracted....Joyce had never been less than human if she hadn't felt a little breathless thrill of triumph. There was none of the fiery attraction she felt for Norman—but Norman was beginning to appear a school boy when she contrasted him mentally with Jeff Thorrald. She wished—ridiculously—that Norman could see her now. She felt very sophisticated—very metropolitan as she sat in the night club sipping iced drinks made of heady gin.

Now, intoxicating than the gin, the sense of beauty and color and wealth which surrounded them. Intoxicating the feel of Nadine's green dress which Joyce knew made her the prettiest girl in the place. Intoxicating the half veiled admiration in Jeff's eyes when she turned suddenly to find his face near her own.

The dancing girls of the night club were doing a number in the spotlight—Joyce drank it with wild abandon. Slim flashing bodies leaping about—colored veils—while the spots bathed them in changing lights.

Joyce's eyes were starry and her lips were parted in an excited little smile as she looked up into Jeff's dark face.

"I've been watching you—eating it up, aren't you, you lovely little pagan!"

"Why do you call me that?"

Perhaps it was the directness of the question. Perhaps there was something in the violet eyes which warned the man. Something dropping behind his hot gaze like a curtain. His laughed easily. Nodded to the dancing nymphs.

"Because you're like that—all fire and rhythm. This is the sort of thing you should have, Joyce—have for your very own. I mean all this—" his hand his his cigarette in his hand had dropped to her knee.

Joyce had managed to shift her position so that he must take his hand. Years of being pursued with drummers and Riverton admirers had given Joyce a smoothness of technique which would have accounted for.

He looked deep into her eyes and that heavy lower lip came out pugnaciously.

But he was most circumspect. When they danced, he held her more lightly that Len had held her. Only his black eyes caressed her. Only a subdued increased tide of this unusual restraint had wheted his appetite, and added zest to what was, for the girl, an all new thrill.

When one gets to bed at four, one does not rise from the train looking for work. Joyce slept until noon, then after a light lunch fell into lying in the amber satin bed with Nadine idly chattering about the night's adventure, very handsome and luxuriant and a little wit pitiful.

As she lay back against the pillow sipping the coffee which Lousy Mae brought her on a tray, Joyce took a sort of wry delight in letting her mind dull to the point of not caring.

.....At this hour it had been her task to help Aunt with the upstairs work.....Making beds.....Sweeping the dusty hall.....Hearing Aunt's mind coming up stairs his sour look following on her heels.....Opening the door of the room she was cleaning ..."Mrs. Slade's having company—interrupted about Aunt Clara.

Glorious—to be living in a fairy-tale with Nadine as fairy godmother.

But Joyce could not always hold this mood. Her natural independence struggled against this lazy life. There were hours when she seemed to struggle out of a perfumed dream...Moments when she worried desperately about getting to work. Moments when Mrs's sour philosophy seemed to ring.

One got on in life through hard and set rules. Joyce had read it—twice over for what one perceived. Pleasure, relaxation, luxury—that work was the rule of life...She worried about the slim supply of money in her purse—Nadine's check read the Want Ads in the newspapers, looked longingly at the silk robe and feather trimmed mules as she did so, and mercifully was aware of Joyce's anxious picture she presented.

Encouraging to see all the girls who wanted work.. all the employers who would take only experienced help.

After this it was easier to take Nadine's philosophical viewpoint.

"Why worry?" shrugged Nadine. "Jeff thinks you have a good voice" ..Madame Estelle, it now transpired was to arrange and her to-do was a matter of weeks.

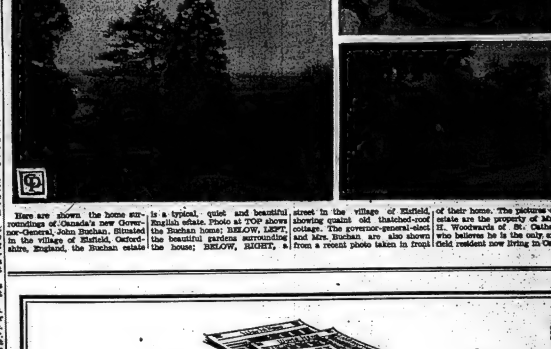
In the wake of Nadine's words came a ring of the doorbell. A fantastic boy with a long pale purple hair tied with silver gauze for Joyce.

Opened it disclosed two dozen orchids on a sheaf of maiden hair fern. Jeff Thorrald's card was attached.

Orchids.....Joyce lifted them and looked down on them with an odd little smile. In Riverton, even Aggie Cameron was wooed with roses!

"What are you laughing about?" asked Nadine curiously.

"I was laughing" Joyce's eyes were bright and mocking as she looked at the flowers.



She was remembering a girl who wept with happiness when Norman Wakefield gave her a silver vanity case.

TREASURY, AUDIT CHANGES AHEAD HEPBURN STATES

No New Appointments Made Except of Experts

PERMANENCY PLAN

Salaries Unchanged, But Slight Reduction in Staff

Toronto, May 14 (CP)—Future policy of the Ontario Government with respect to the Civil Service was enunciated today by Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn in forecasting re-organization of the audit and treasury departments.

Key points in the plan will be placing on the permanent roll of service persons who have been listed as temporary employees. This will make it possible for them to pay into the superannuation fund.

Mr. Hepburn said the government had records of some employees being listed as members of the temporary staff for as long as 13 years.

"It was a method of beclouding the law as to cost of administration," said Mr. Hepburn. "We have records of years showing many on the temporary staff were paid out of the contingency fund."

Responsibilities of Treasury

The Premier said he would submit recommendations to cabinet tomorrow regarding reorganization of the treasury and audit departments. There will be no reduction of salaries but reorganization will consist of slight reduction of staff and certain transfers.

Mr. Hepburn stated the government required additional staff in the corporation tax branch. Further reductions would reach a number of employees being eligible for superannuation.

The Premier said the government had no intention of replacing J. T. White Deputy Provincial Treasurer or Provincial Auditor Gordon Brown.

No New Appointments

The government is making no new appointments except in certain cases where experts are required in a department. As an example Mr. Hepburn mentioned the possibility of doctors or nurses being hired if they were required for types of work in which they were specialists.

Originally 700 employees leave the service each year through superannuation, marriage, or death. By making no new appointments the government expects to have the service down to normal strength in about a year.

Finally, Mr. Hepburn reiterated his previous announcement that the government would establish an eligibility list of returned soldiers. When positions arise they will be filled by those men "no matter what their politics are," said the Premier.

QUINTS' ESTATE VALUED $175,000 DECLARES CROLL

Six Times As Great As When Made Wards of His Majesty

STATEMENT GIVEN

Likely New House Will Be Built For the Parents Soon

Toronto, May 14 (CP)—Assets of the Dionne quintuplets are six times as great today as when the Ontario Legislature passed a bill making them special wards of His Majesty the King, represented by Minister of Welfare David Croll according to figures released today by the Minister.

When the Government took over the babies they had about $27,000, said Mr. Croll, but in the six intervening months the guardians have managed to build up an estate worth $175,000.

The $27,000 included $5,000 in cash and there were contracts pending for $22,000, Mr. Croll added.

"In the last three months we've managed to build up an estate worth $175,000," said Mr. Croll. The quintuplet's assets have septupled and we've effected with negligible expenditure—nothing paid out for agents or managers. And we've other contracts in hand which will swell the fund still further."

Concerning the present situation with that prevailing, when the Government undertook "to defend the premises," Mr. Croll said when the guardianship legislation passed through the Legislature last April there was a plot to snatch the babies and "kidnap them for exportation them in the States."

40% to Premier

The Minister added there was also a subsisting contract whereby 40 per cent of all takings went "to the premier."

Mr. Croll estimated if the Dionnes had managed to enter such advantageous contracts as the Government had arranged the babies' estate would be $105,000 instead of $175,000 because Dionne's manager, Oscar Hertelle, would have had 40 per cent or $70,000.

London, May 14 (CP Cable)—The Dardanelles now threat to cast a political shadow over the international scene.

British official circles are a cold welcome to the recent addition to rearmament schemes, Turkey's demand for permission to fortify the Dardanelles echoed often in late weeks and reportedly received the Turkish delegation in Buchrest yesterday.

As a result of the treaty of Lausanne—the peace treaty with Turkey—a strip along both sides of the Dardanelles, gateway between Europe and Asia, was demilitarized. It was a wide strip on both sides of the frontier between Turkey and Bulgaria. If Bulgaria is to be permitted to re-arm, Turkey claims, then she should be permitted to fortify the strip for foreign warships.

The Daily Herald said Turkey would demand the right to fortify the straits if the Allies grant concessions to any of the former central powers as is expected to occur at the forthcoming Danubian conference in Rome.

ITALY'S RELATIONS WITH ETHIOPIA QUITE STRAINED

Duce Expects to Have 950,000 Mobilized By Friday

Ethiopia May Seek Support of Turks in the Event of War

(By Stewart French)

Rome, May 14.—(AP)—Italy may have 900,000 troops mobilized by Friday, it was indicated today, as her relations with Ethiopia, wavered between conciliation and increased belligerency. A government spokesman, announcing members or the class of 1913 had received mobilization orders, referred to Ethiopia's "evidence attitude of hostility."

He added, while Italy is prepared to name conditions to attempt to promote a peaceful settlement of the East African dispute under the Arbitration Treaty of 1928, she would not do so until assurance of the intention had been received from Emperor Haile Selassie.

It was learned British efforts to secure conciliation and prevent the issue from embarrassing the League of Nations Council was far from pleasing to Premier Mussolini but he finally acceded to the conciliation proposals, when France backed them.

Try to Avert Clash

The British were said to have made it clear every possible move should be made to avert an open clash at Geneva or any action in Africa, which might lead to hostilities, before the League Council meets in the Assembly session opening May 20, and demanded immediate arbitration of the controversy.

Reports from Asmara that Ethiopia might test Turkey's support in the event of hostilities with Italy spilled over Rome. Italy would resent any such alliance.

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, May 14 (AP) — Fears hostilities between Ethiopia and Italy would begin in September, when the rainy season ends were expressed in Government circles today as word was received of Italy's action in mobilizing 200,000 more troops.

Ra Mulugeta, Minister of War, said the massing of Italian troops in East Africa did not but shattered hope of a peaceful settlement.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs said the official propaganda reports that Ethiopia was seeking military support from Turkey and other near eastern powers.

PAINTER DRIVEN FROM WORK BY BEE

Pedestrians along the lower section of Front Street shortly after the hour o'clock this morning were at first amazed and then amused.

An overall-clad painter who had been engaged on the work of painting an overhanging sign with a whoop descended from the ladder in precipitate haste and then with wild stampings and gyrations on the back of the hand went through a fantastic Indian war dance to the accompaniment of scathing remarks from the bystanders.

The frenzied was soon explained. It was a bee—a bee that had alighted on the back of his neck and he, in came annoyed attempt to dislodge it, made to brush it off—and it marked the first reported casualty of the season.

CHANGE DATE FOR WELL BABY CLINIC

Will Be Held on Thursday Instead of Friday

Co-incident with the changing of dates of the Well Baby Clinic of the local Victorian Order of Nurses from the regular Friday afternoon clinic of each week to Thursday afternoon in future, commencing this week, the regular clinic will be quieta at a little party arranged by the lady members of the Order. It was decided at the regular meeting held last evening in the Nurses' Home that the Thursday afternoon was believed to be in the best interests of the mothers who usually bring with house work on the Friday.

Presented her regular monthly report at the meeting Miss Soltar, nurse, pointed to a steadily growing number of local residents dependent on the care of the local order. During the month of April, a total of 483 visits were made to 114 patients. Forty-seven new cases were listed during the month. Also during that period 56 expectant mothers were given pre-natal care and instruction by herself and Miss Webster.

In a comparison of the first four months of 1935 with 1934 a steady increase in number of patients cared for is noted. Listed by the month, January of 1934 shows a total of 63 cases; January, 1935, 61; February, 1934, 43; February, 1935, 45; March, 1934, 52; March, 1935, 45; April, 1934, 40; April, 1935, 47. Total amount of fees collected during the first four months of this year was reported very gratifying.

Thanksgiving For Recovery

A resolution of thanks and congratulations upon the complete recovery from illness of the President of the Order, Mrs. T. The convention, held at Ottawa, was attended by four nurses and delegates of the Order throughout the Dominion.

Letters of thanks will be sent to Belleville Eastern Star, Chapter 55, for the recent donation of $40.00 to the Order and also to the local Catholic Women's League for a donation of $10.00.

Final arrangements were completed for the annual tag day to be held in the city on Saturday, June 1. Assisting the smaller workers who will be selected to carry tags for distribution will be the lady members, many of whom volunteered to take over the task of soliciting throughout the downtown section.

Hamel Benn, who is the owner of the automobile which is alleged to have struck Sero and who was also arrested and jointly charged with Perry, was allowed his liberty upon the placing of $500.00 bail last night.

Chief Frank Smith of Deseronto, assisted by O.P.P. Constable Wm. McIlrien of Belleville, has investigated the case thoroughly and statements given by one who had been the driver of the automobile that is alleged to have struck Sero. Accompanying the driver who police say they believe was responsible for the "hit and run" incident was it is said a man whose name the police give as Arthur Clute, of Deseronto.

Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., announced today, that in all probability the charges previously laid against Benn at the time of his arrest, would be dropped. Provincial Police yesterday stated that two witnesses had observed the "hit and run" car at the time of the accident and that others claimed to have seen the driver of the white car prior to the incident and are ready to identify him. Perry is scheduled to appear in the Deseronto police court on charges of criminal negligence on Thursday, when he and Perry at an early hour this morning.

COULD NOT SEW A BUTTON ON

Her Hands Were Helpless with Rheumatism

At one time she thought she would lose the use of her right hand, but a blessing—in the form of Kruschen Salts—put her right again.

"I was sure in a bad state," she writes. "In fact, I could not do my housework, I was so bad with rheumatism in my arms and hands. I could not sleep at night, and I thought I would lose the use of my right hand. I could not hold anything, nor could I sew a button on. My arm would go dead. I was advised to try Kruschen, and inside of two weeks I found such a change. I have kept on taking it, and now I sleep all night—thanks to Kruschen's help and relief."—(Mrs.) J. H.

Two of the ingredients of Kruschen Salts have the power of dissolving uric acid crystals, which are responsible for rheumatic agony. Other ingredients of these famil Nature to expel these dissolved crystals through the natural channel.

WARM RAIN HELPS ONTARIO CROPS, DELAYS SEEDING

Frontenac County Notes Improvement in Alfalfa

BARLEY ON DEMAND

Durham Reports the Fall Wheat Mostly Winter-Killed

Toronto, May 14—(CP)—Warm rain which fell in Ontario last week stimulated growth and increased crop prospects but held up seeding in various sections, according to the Department of Agriculture's weekly crop report released today.

Seeding throughout western and southern part of the province had been practically completed. Fall wheat, meadows and spring grains appeared to be making good progress as a result of the warm rains.

The best crop prospects for the crop of apples, peaches, plums and cherries for the past few years were in evidence while Lincoln in the Niagara fruit belt reported peach trees just bursting into bloom. Orchards in Middlesex were developing satisfactorily.

Durham county reported the majority of fall wheat in the county killed but farther north there are some good fields. Grimsby was reported slow in Ontario and Muskoka and Parry Sound districts. Plantings and considerable grain was coming up well. Cold weather in Peterborough retarded the growth of spring grains.

MEADOWS PROMISING

Frontenac noted improvement in the condition of alfalfa and new plantings. Feed has been scarce in Grenville and while 50 percent of the stock has been moved out to pasture the animals are in rather poor condition. Seeding looked promising in Leeds but seeding has been delayed by cool weather.

Reporting a decided increase in the demand for seed barley, Prescott and Russell expected a decided acreage increase over last year.

Weather during the past few weeks was hard on winter crops in Temiskaming and in some cases farmers found it necessary to re-seed part of their fields. Crops in Algoma made a satisfactory growth during the week, seeding in Kenora and Rainy River was held up by rain.

Bay of Quinte Intermediates Face Barrier With Four Teams With Norm. Mallott as Prexy

Gananoque Admitted to Loop With Napanee, Picton, Belleville

OPEN ON MAY 24th

Double Schedule Adopted and Umpires for the Season Named

Four teams will face the barrier in the Bay of Quinte Intermediate baseball league this year, the Gananoque club being admitted into the fold at the annual meeting of the league held in Napanee last night. Norman A. Mallott, of Picton, was the unanimous choice of the meeting as president for the ensuing year, Belleville, Picton and Napanee clubs being the three veteran members of the league to be present and not only admit the Gananoque entry but warmly welcome President Mallott into his office.

Considerable business was completed during the meeting, it being definitely pulled out the Gibbards had been elevated to an intermediate "A" rating, while the remaining league clubs will be rated as "B" teams. Mr. Gibbard informed the meeting that in order to qualify to enter the intermediate "A" O.B.A.A. play-downs, Belleville will have to finish first in the Bay of Quinte League, the Napanee club second. This assurant good competition for all teams during the playing season. A double schedule was adopted. It was moved that the two teams finishing first in the league standings, exclusive of the Napanee "A" entry would play-off for the league championship and the termination of the regular league schedule.

Other details of the previous meetings were adopted as was the treasurer's report, that the Bay of Quinte league had operated on exactly an even basis last season. The entrance fee into the league will be the same per club, payable not later than June 15th.

Open May 24th

The opening games for the league were arranged for the 24th May, opening into action on May 24th with Belleville at Gananoque and Napanee at Picton. On May 30th Napanee is an afternoon game. The remainder of the schedule will be drawn and released by Secretary G. E. Gibbard, who was re-elected to the office of Secretary-Treasurer. The Gananoque club was given a vote of thanks for their generosity in allowing the Belleville and District League to play this season in the Bay of Quinte park. It was agreed with the Napanee Gibbards will count as wins and losses in the league standing, but this club will not be permitted to enter into the final league play-offs.

Each club was asked to submit the names of three referees and the league will use the same system of arbiters being used as was in existence last season. The league plans to supply the umpire-in-chief, while the home club will supply the field umpires. The fee for umpires was arrived at. The umpires named were Picton, Dave Young and H. G. Woodley; Belleville, Geo. Clapper and ——; Napanee, Bill Baker and H. Glow; Napanee, Les. Richardson. The Spalding baseball will be used as the official ball for the league, while the Knox trophy will be awarded the champions.

President—N. A. Mallott, Picton.

Past President—Chas. Lounds, Napanee.

1st Vice-President—B. A. Fanning, Belleville.

2nd Vice-President—W. S. Anderson, Gananoque.

Secretary-Treasurer—O. E. Gibbard, Napanee.

The executive shall be composed of two delegates from each club, when necessary. The league constitution were given to the various clubs following the meeting. The delegates present last night were: Picton—Fred Healy, Ron. Church, Norm. Mallott; Belleville—Jack Fanning, R. Darrah, Langman; Gananoque—Leo Amo, M. T. Smith, Jack Anderson; Napanee—Walter Gerow, Roy Wilson and O. E. Gibbard.

HOWARD WILLIAMS OF FALLS SIGNED

Meets Ted Clarke of Kirkland Lake at the Boxing Show

Champions and more champions are to appear at the Belleville Arena during Wednesday night's boxing show. This morning Promoter Chris Allen announced he had signed Howard Williams of Niagara Falls, former welterweight champion of Canada, to meet Ted Clark, of Kirkland Lake, three two rounders to meet in place of the Gorman-Maracle previously arranged bout. The program will also see fighters the calibre of Williams and Clark considerably elevate the standard of Matchmaker Allen's W.W.A.A.C. card to a level equal to any card presented in larger centres at more fabulous prices.

Williams, two time winner over Jimmie Flood, amateur middleweight champion of New York State and has defeated Bob Livingston, former middleweight champion of Ohio. Both of these boxers agreed to come to Belleville and fight in the 160 pound class in a bout that will dominate the fights prior to the four inter-city amateur bouts, Trenton and Belleville boxers. The addition of two such well known fighters as Williams and Clark makes Wednesday night's local boxing show a championship affair indeed.

All the local district champions tapered off their training today and will rest until Wednesday night when eight bouts will be presented featuring all title holders. Clarke and Howard "Dynamite" Wheeler and Williams and Bob Wilson in the feature weight champion at 126 pounds."

Additional ringside chairs have been ordered by the management as the pre-sale of tickets is the largest seen locally in many years.

COLUMBIA LIMITS RADIOADVERTISING

Children's Programs Will Be In Charge of Psychologist

New York, May 14.—For the first time in American radio broadcasting, restrictions on the amount of commercial announcements in network programs will be established July 30 by the Columbia Broadcasting system.

Effective July 30, a maximum of 10 per cent of the total broadcasting period may be devoted to the promotion of sponsors' merchandise, including contests and offers, for programs after 6 p.m. Daytime programs will be allowed a maximum of 15 per cent, while Sunday broadcasts will be limited to 5 per cent.

Children's programs by prohibiting entirely certain types of commercial announcements for different broadcasts. To this end Columbia is employing Dr. Lee Gregory, well known child psychologist, who will have the benefit of an advisory board composed of members, with the special purpose of pointing the way toward better broadcasting to boys and girls, approval of parents, children and educational groups.

The new policy becomes completely effective July 30.

The Columbia Broadcasting system has concluded, after serious consideration, that no one broadcasting for any product which describes grapefruit as "refreshingly unlaxative" has fully functions, symptomatic results of internal disturbances, and laxative foods are generally not considered acceptable topics in social groups. This policy will specifically exclude from the Columbia network not only advertising of laxatives as such, but the advertising of any laxative properties in any other products.

It will further exclude the discussion of constipation, indigestion, or other advertising which by its nature presents questions of good taste in connection with radio listening.

In children's programs the Columbia announcement lists eight specific themes and dramatic treatments which are not to be permitted in broadcasts for children:

The exalting, as modern heroes, of gangsters, criminals and racketeers will not be allowed.

Disrespect for either parental or other proper authority must not be glorified or encouraged.

Cruelty, deceit and selfishness must not be presented as worthy characteristics.

Programs that arouse harmful, nervous reactions in the child must not be presented.

Conceit, smugness or an unwarranted sense of superiority over others less fortunate may not be presented as laudable.

Recklessness and abandon must not be falsely identified with a healthy spirit of adventure.

Unfair exploitation of others for personal gain must not be made praiseworthy.

Dishonesty and deceit are not to be made appealing or attractive to the child.

POLICE COURT

Two inebriates were arrested by the local police at an early hour this morning, both pleading guilty in Magistrate F. J. Butler's police court today. The minimum fine of ten dollars and costs was imposed in each case, but as neither individual had the ready cash at hand, they were given until the end of the week to raise the money.

Chas. Aikman, Lake Township resident, pleaded guilty to operating a motor vehicle without first having obtained an operator's license, when this morning local police heard a loud crash in the vicinity of the corner of Bridge and Front Streets. Upon investigating it was discovered that a silent police standard at that intersection had been damaged, apparently by a passing motor vehicle. Later Aikman was apprehended at the south end of Front Street, where he had parked his truck. He readily admitted damaging the "dummy". Besides paying a fine for failure to produce his driver's license, the accused was asked to pay for the damages of the stalwart silent police standard.

Seventeen inmates were assembled in the city cell block at the police station last night, where they were afforded warm sleeping quarters. They were all liberated early today and instructed to "move along". No other accidents were reported on local streets or adjacent highways last night.

Thirty Million Loss Due to Rum-Running

Washington, May 14—(AP)—Rum-runners after a brief post-repeal lull, are again operating on a large scale off the Eastern United States coast.

The House Ways and Means Committee reported in a report on the Treasury Department's proposed anti-smuggling law, the rum-runners are responsible for an annual loss of $30,000,000 in revenue.

Only two smuggling vessels were observed off the coast in March 1934, but by February of this year twenty-two were at work.

Leader of Arab Revolt Takes Turn for Worse After Motorcycle Crash

Lawrence of Arabia Fractures Skull When Thrown

NO EYEWITNESSES

For Past Ten Years Has Served in the Air Corps

Wool Dorsetshire, England, May 14.—(AP)—Col. Thomas E. Lawrence famed leader of the Arab revolt against Turkish rule during the great war was reported today to have suffered a sudden turn for the worse in the military hospital where he was brought last night after being injured in a motorcycle accident.

The staff captain of Bovington Camp near the hospital said the picturesque figure in the Arabian campaign was "in a critical condition and suffering from concussion."

He said he may also have received a fracture of the skull.

Two special nurses were summoned from Bournemouth and three physicians hastening here from London by airplane in company with Lawrence's parents.

The accident in which the celebrated figure in Arabia's war time history was injured occurred last night at Cloud's Hill near the Lawrence's lonely cottage at the north end of Bovington.

His motorcycle crashed into a bicycle ridden by a boy and both riders were thrown to the ground.

No Eyewitnesses

"So far as we can learn, nobody actually saw the accident,' the Camp Bovington Army Captain said, 'but he was riding a motorcycle at the time. The youth, who was riding the bicycle, Albert Hargreaves, also is in the camp hospital suffering from concussion."

In response to a flood of inquiries, the hospital issued the following statement:

"He is in the hospital with severe head injuries and his condition is serious."

Earlier hospital attaches denied Lawrence's condition was critical. They refused to comment on reports he had suffered a fracture of the skull.

Lawrence was listed on the hospital records under his adopted name of T. E. Shaw, which he assumed to avoid publicity after his Arabian exploits had brought him world-wide attention. Only a few weeks ago Lawrence now 47 years old, retired to his cottage in Dorsetshire seeking seclusion.

Enlistment Expired

His ten year term of enlistment in the Royal Air Force expires last March.

Reports of the mishap, which had befallen Lawrence created great excitement in this vicinity, where the exploits of the Arabian revolt was a familiar figure as he dashed about the countryside on his motorcycle.

Only recently publication of a book written by Ernest Main regarding Lawrence's Arabian activities brought home new publicity.

Main's book, called "Trag," asserted Lawrence had "raised problems infinitely more difficult" in Iraq than those he solved.

Picturesque Figure

"Lawrence of Arabia", who emerged from the Great War as one of its most picturesque figures found one of his principal diversions in driving his motorcycle about the countryside at high speeds.

Before succeeding in the operated a machine of special racing design.

Sent to Arabia during the war as a member of the Military Intelligence Section of the War Office Lawrence inspired the Arab revolt against Turkish rule. After waging a spectacular campaign against the Central Powers' forces in the desert area, he returned to take part in the Paris Peace Conference.

There he met bitter disappointment in not winning for his Arab comrades the concessions he had hoped to give in return for their activities against the Turks.

The story of his experiences was related in "The Seven Pillars of Wisdom," published in a limited edition and made available to the public later in a much abridged form under the title "Revolt in the Desert."

Lawrence refused decorations for his great war work and after the war was in and out of the air force, once going back to Arabia and then on to Afghanistan to halt Amanullah's alleged moves against Great Britain.

Later he went to India to work against the Reds. In the air force he was just a mechanic—a good one. Although at the time of his virtual retirement it was reported he could have had almost any post Britain had to offer in the Near East.

Helen Publicity

Although Lawrence's own story of his desert campaigns against the Turks in the war has become an epic of the Great War, Lawrence himself always balked publicity and turned down all honors.

Friends of Lawrence recently waxed indignant over publication of an alleged confession that his work "Revolt in the Desert" was a "glorious hoax."

If he actually wrote the letter made public by the Hooter Memorial Library at Stanford, Calif., they said it merely meant he considered "Revolt in the Desert" incomplete and therefore a dishonest literary work compared to his complete story, "Seven Pillars of Wisdom".

The letter, standing alone, they said, placed a wrong interpretation on the work and motives of a man who one said is "absolutely above and beyond money".

Lawrence completed last March a 10-year term of enlistment in the Royal Air Force and retired to his Dorsetshire cottage.

Other resolutions were:

"Since there has been stressed upon us today the need of better trained leadership in our Sunday School, we urge every pastor and Sunday School executive to arrange this year for either a local class or to share in a standard training school."

"That we as a convention wish to draw to the attention of the township organization that the banner competition in Sophiasburg township has created considerable interest and succeeded in raising the standard of Sunday School and therefore recommend that other townships profit by their example."

"And when enough townships do that a county competition might be used."

Although farmers were said to have lost $40,000 as a result of the operations of the company which exported cattle to England, Judge Jocyn Wearing late yesterday after a trial which lasted three and a half days dismissed charges of fraud and conspiracy against the pair.

FOREST LOSS

Forest fire loss in Canada is of such proportions that attention must be called again and again to the national waste. If the waste were not controllable the situation would be bad enough but as it is admitted that ninety per cent of the loss by fire is due to human carelessness and ignorance, the situation is lamentable. If men are careless in the woods, what is there to show that they are not also careless in everything else—the handling of machinery, the driving of motor cars? Is carelessness the greatest shortcoming of mankind?

Experts claim it is as far as the losses by the destruction of wooded country are concerned. The press has been referring to the urgency of proper patrol and of education of the people to practise care so as to save the forest wealth. Even with all the upsetting of conventions today and the unreasoned talk about material values, it is to be wondered at that so many persons are careless when it comes to the matter of fires. How often the expression is heard that it would be a good thing should a fire have gained sufficient start that the building would have to be practically replaced. The idea is that insurance would replace it. But insurance does not imply that there has been no loss. It is just a social method of dividing and sharing risk and loss.

This attitude of course falls to take notice of the fact that wealth once destroyed cannot be restored except by creation of new values to substitute for it. The last wealth we can afford to have destroyed is the forest wealth for it brings new building or offers material for so much construction.

Could those who roam the woods and are careless in handling matches or cigarettes or who do not put out their fires realize that destroyed forest wealth cannot be replaced, they would, it cannot but be clear, exercise more care. Only time can replace forest wealth and that by more growth.

PIPE MAJOR HONORED

Awarding of the jubilee medal to Pipe Major Albert Johnstone was one of the most popular awards made in Belleville. If any man in Belleville has striven to keep the name of the British Isles, including Scotland, to the front in music, it is Albert Johnstone. And he sticks to the native instrument of his own country, the bagpipe. As a judge in Highland music and in Highland dance he has been in much demand at clan gatherings all the way across Canada.

But at last the secret will out. The pipe major is a composer. Doubtless inspired by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, who created a march for pipers, the doughty highlander from the country of the Black Douglas and the Bruce has himself been penning notes for the pipes. It was the inspiration of the recent royal jubilee which caught his imagination so he wrote a jubilee march. No one knew that this little piece of pipe music had been composed until yesterday when word came from St. James' Palace, London, that H. R. H. the Prince of Wales had received the copy of the composition and was thanking Mr. Johnstone for it. Now Belleville folk will soon hear through the Argyll Over-Seas Club the stirring composition which the Prince has graciously been pleased to accept.

But back to the King's Silver Jubilee medal. Those who know Pipe Major Albert Johnstone (and military men know him well) were delighted at the honor which has come to the gallant Scotsman, who has given his best for the maintenance of the British as well as the Scottish tradition.

DUKE ADMITS HE'S A MUG

The Duke of Manchester, sentenced at London, England, for pawning his mother's jewels which did not belong to him, is not sure now that it was a good thing that he is a duke. He regrets that he was not allowed to go into business when a young man. He admits that he has been "broke" so often that he was just able to pay for his valet's meals. So much for limitation of a man by rank. The duke now says he is a mug.

So rank is not all. There must be the means to "keep it up" or how is a duke better off than any one else?

Conscious remorse and anguish must be felt, to curb desire, to break the stubborn will, and work a second nature in the soul, ere virtue can regain the place she lost.—Rowe.

FULLY BLEST

He is a child and so he knows
The fullest fragrance of the rose;
Exempted from all earthly cares,
By childhood's glad estate, he shares
The mirth of April thoroughfares.

He is a little child, for him
Joy fills each hour to the brim:
No morrow's puzzle, yesterday
Already vague and far away,
The now alone for song and play.

He is a child, and so the one
Soul fully blest beneath the sun.
To him the heavens gaily sings,
For him the red-bird spreads its wings,
For him the sky's cloud-banner swings!

MONDAY MORNING THOUGHT centres upon those nations which are talking war as if they wanted it, and are making feverish preparations for human slaughter on gigantic scale. In the peaceful quiet of a Canadian Sunday thoughts of war are dim and distant, but Monday morning's headlines again bring back the gaunt spectre. The belief that the devil assisted by the munition makers, kicks up all the wars is strengthened by a consideration of the lack of religion of the warlike nations. Germany is fighting the church and religion; Russia is tearing down churches and teaching that there is no God; Japan clings to its ancient idols and wants no modern religion except on a paying commercial basis, and Japan is ruled by the ambitious military clan which regards war as necessary for its growth and very existence. Russia says there is no God and builds up a great army and aerial fleet. Returning to the sacred book she is reminded that THE FOOL HATH SAID IN HIS HEART THERE IS NO GOD. Germany of today has swung to the opposite extreme of the Kaiser's partnership with the Deity, "Me und Gott", and has placed upon a pinnacle a soap box orator who is intoxicating the nation with the exuberance of his own verbosity. The Kaiser sought to conscript God to direct his armies, and placed the Deity second in command in his attempt to conquer the world—but the best-laid plans of mice and men aft gang agley, as a noted Scotsman has told us, and the Kaiser's wonderful and invincible war machine was wrecked and the great war lord reduced from man status to that of mice while German of today is moving farther away from Christianity than at any other fair to share the same fate as the kingdom the Kaiser wrecked upon the rocks of arrogance, jealousy and hatred.

"GALLANT FOX", one of the greatest race horses of his time, won the Kentucky Derby a few years ago, and repeated a week later with the winning of "The Preakness" in Maryland. Now the son of "Gallant Fox", "Omaha", has duplicated the feat of his son and won the Derby and The Preakness, beating his father at the time in The Preakness but not in the Derby. The city of Omaha, Nebraska, was so proud of Omaha's win of the Kentucky Derby that the citizens sent a monster horseshoe of roses to adorn the horse's head after the running of The Preakness. The floral horseshoe was sent in advance and when queried what to do if Omaha failed to finish first the answer came to decorate him anyway, but his admirers in the city of Omaha were certain he would win.

NEWS FROM ABYSSINIA is disquieting and it will not take much to start hostilities between the soldiers of the black kingdom and those of Mussolini sent to the borders of Ethiopia to be ready if and when. Other nations whose interests are likely to be affected by a clash of arms in this area are moving to bring about a peaceful settlement, but with both prospective belligerents all dressed up in soldier clothes, armed to the teeth and farther, just aching to go, looks like a clash all right.

MAY 14TH, 1915.

An exceedingly pleasant time was spent at Hotel Quinte last evening at a "mess dinner" given by Col. Prestpin and the officers of the 39th Battalion now stationed in this city awaiting orders to join their comrades in active service overseas. Colonel Preston and officers had issued invitations to a number of our leading citizens, many of whom had served in the volunteer force of Canada and who could and did wear long service medals. About sixty persons were present, Col. Preston occupied the chair and the vice-chair was ably filled by Adjutant Campbell, a grandson of the late Rev. Mr. Campbell, who was rector of St. Thomas' Church in this city some seventy years ago, and after whom Campbell Street is named. Among those present and who responded to toasts were Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Mr. A. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., Mr. W. B. Northrup, M. P., Col. S. S. Lazier and the Rev. R. C. Hagarve, rector of Christ Church. At mess dinners all these toasts are not usual, but Col. Preston decided to make an exception in this instance as there were present unofficial guests representative of the city and Dominion.

Letters to the Editor

A COLOSSAL BLUNDER.

To the Ontario Intelligencer:

Sir,—Thirty years ago the belief was general, even in the minds of leaders of the Dominion Intelligencer, that we could never grow too much wheat. In the prairie provinces, and out of that conviction came the dream of a rich and populous Hudson Bay. We could get the people, we would easily rival the United States in new land, and in the cheap way systems, while the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier quite recently summed: "Pray God it may not be too late." It wasn't too late. It was a century too soon. For the harvest over of two hundred million bushels from last year tells us that we have been sold for years past, that we can grow, and are growing, too much wheat.

By means of guarantees to the amount of hundreds of millions we built these two additional transcontinental systems, with their great outlook at Grand Mere, and the last spike had not been driven until they both lay alone dead on the doorsteps of their chief client, the Federal Government. Shock No. 1.

Shock No. 2 came with the discovery that there was not nearly enough traffic to support the two huge we had built. Nevertheless shock No. 3 lurked just around the corner. It was the Crow rate which should have been obvious from the start that it was a gift contributed our railway mileage that 93.7 per cent of the total lay in the territory which contained but 22 per cent of the population. Then came the fourth paralyzing shock, when we found that the operation of the Canadian National Railway, composed of the bankrupt provincial roads, had cost us over a million dollars annually since 1918. All this happened because of our primary blunder of the first shock.

That is our railway problem. It will mean national insolvency for us if we do not act promptly and in the right way. The right way as I see it, after years of study, is to deal with it at the roots. That is throw the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific into a friendly partnership, cut out all the needless parallels, and put the unified systems under sound, rather than political management. That would do it, and solve our problem, which the Prime Minister assures us threatens our national life more than anything else. This is not propaganda. It is simply the honest judgment of a Canadian who is terribly alarmed and wants to provoke sound public discussion.

Chair Seizure Claimed Illegal

Peterborough, May 14.—The last word on the recent incident of the seizure of council chamber furniture was a statement at the City Council meeting yesterday that the chairs occupied by the aldermen were purchased by the City Commissioners, and that they are actually the property of the Commission, and therefore could not be seized in an action against the city through its council.

Civic officials were content to forget about the bailiff's intrusion on an order obtained by C. N. Gordon, but they contended that the seizure could not have succeeded in law because the listed chattels, except probably the Mayor's chair are held in the name of the City Trust Commission.

FARM HELP IS MORE PLENTIFUL

Reversing the situation of but a few weeks ago when farm help was scarce and hard to get, at the present time over twenty names of men offering themselves for the work are listed at the local Employment Service of Canada office. Farmers on the other hand, however, have the calling less frequently for help until at the present time their enquiries for men have dropped off almost to nothing.

A heavy demand for domestic help has been the feature during the past week following the first effort of local housewives to commence cleaning of homes. Instead of odd job work, the women being sent from the local office are engaged by the month. Odd job labor for the men is correspondingly scarce.

ROTARY HIS DUTY TO BETTER WORLD

Mr. Mackenzie Robertson Speaks on Club Ideals

Mackenzie Robertson was the speaker at Monday's meeting of the Belleville Rotary Club, his subject being "Rotary Information". The origin and growth of Rotary was sketched in an interesting manner by the speaker who closed with reference to the birth and growth of Rotary in Belleville and its activities in community service, also some personal experiences at International Rotary Conventions in Minneapolis, Minnesota; Dallas, Texas; and Vienna, Austria; with side trips to Minden, Holland, Italy and other places. The keynote of the address was the stressing of the importance of Rotary in the making of a better world and the high esteem in which the order is held throughout the world Rotary being known and highly respected in every civilized country.

Greetings from the New York City Rotary Club were delivered by J. O. Hertiy, a recent guest of that club. The day he visited the New York Club Mr. Hertiy was delighted to meet Knight MacGregor, formerly of Belleville, and a member of the New York Club. Mr. MacGregor gave a solo and received an ovation from the several hundred Rotarians present. He also sang a duet with a lady vocalist who had just returned from Italy. That Mr. MacGregor has made a high name for himself in the metropolis was very evident from the applause which greeted his vocal efforts at the Rotary meeting, said Mr. Hertiy.

REV. DR. J. GOFORTH WILL SPEAK HERE

Romance of Life of Former Missionary Is Thrilling

The people of Belleville are to have the pleasure of hearing the Rev. Dr. Jonathan Goforth one of Canada's oldest foreign missionaries in point of service and one whose life reads like an exciting adventure.

Dr. Goforth, a graduate of Knox College, Toronto, left for China in 1887. He has served 47 years in China, mostly in Honan but later in Manchuria. He is perhaps one of the best known missionaries in China, a fervent evangelical speaker used extensively in conferences and meetings throughout China. He was forced to flee with his wife and children during the Boxer uprising and was wounded, narrowly escaping death. In the last few years the dread scourge of China, blindness, overtook him and he is now without sight. In spite of his years, he has the voice and features of a youth. More able now to thrill an audience than in his younger days. He will speak in St. Andrew's Church tomorrow, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

BODY POISONS SLOW YOU UP

EVEN slight cases of constipation set up poisons in the body. Are you going through each day half-well . . half the man you might be? Follow this simple suggestion: start eating Post's Bran Flakes With Other Parts of Wheat, a mild laxative. It may make a big difference in the way you feel—and look. Many call it the most delicious cereal they know. Constipation due to insufficient roughage in the diet should yield to Post's Bran Flakes eaten regularly. A competent physician should be consulted for more stubborn cases.

Maskinonge Minnows Placed in Lakes after Weeks of Culture

Reared At Fish Hatchery in This City For Distribution

Hatched and carefully cultured from spawn received some time ago from the northern lakes of this and adjoining counties, hundreds of thousands of maskinonge minnows are now being shipped from the local Government Fish Hatchery back to the shaded lakes and streams from whence they originally came.

Some of the thousands of the darting little minnows were shipped last week, more will be placed in the large containers and sent from the hatchery this week. The tiny fish are being distributed chiefly in the district of Omemee, Lindsay, north of Coburg, Marmora, Campbellford and throughout the north. Some lake trout also under culture will be sent to the inland lakes of this and other districts later. It was stated.

The majority of the eggs received at the hatchery some time ago were from Pigeon Lake, near Omemee, where Government men carry on the task of collecting and fertilizing them. Nets are employed by the men to catch the fish for "stripping".

One of the chief workers entrusted with the job of netting and collecting is Harry Cheeseman, foreman, and Arnold McQuade, assistant. Just after sunrise each morning the men set out in a small punt and haul the nets in by hand. As the nets are pulled in all kinds of fish are collected, sunfish, silver bass, perch and other varieties. With a small dip net all other fish but the maskinonge are put back in the water. The hardest job, that of boiling a four-foot fish, weighing to the neighborhood of twenty pounds is yet to come.

Dexterously both men working together and with the apparent ease of long practise, grasp the fish, one by the slippery snout and one by the tail and lift it out of the net into the boat. While the wrestling and struggling fish attempts to bite and lash it is held over the pan in the boat and quickly stripped by the simple expedition of running one hand down the underside, with a gentle pressure.

Eggs Transferred

Swiftly the men work and soon the net is emptied and the pan filled. These eggs are carefully transferred to special containers and shipped to this city and the hatchery where they are placed in the long jars hanging the racks and through which running water constantly trickles. Watch is kept over the jars and when the unfertile ones, easily recognized by their whiteness, come to the top they are skimmed off and the healthy ones then placed in the long shallow pans with very fine netting in the bottom through which fresh water runs through continually. Here they are kept at room temperature.

Slowly the eggs take shape as the hatching process continues. At first the fish, which some day may test the mettle of the local pole, appear as slightly elongated tiny balls. Gradually the flattening process takes place and two eyes appear in the head. Two weeks after the mother fish has been stripped of the spawn and the male fish of the mill, the thousands of little fish are swimming in the shallow pans, almost ready to be placed in the large green cans and taken north to be liberated in the lakes.

Netting and stripping fish, while not hazardous is a trying and tiresome job. It has its roundabout chores more pressing than even those on a well ordered farm.

"The nets in the lake have to be emptied every day, for example", states Foreman Cheeseman. "If they are not, the fungus that are in them will become so worked up trying to get out of them that they'll fight each other to death. And a slip from a pan of those razor-like teeth one of the big fish carries is nothing to 'fool with,'" he adds.

Being of the largest fish weigh in the neighborhood of fifty pounds and can almost lick their weight in piscatorial without poundage, it was reported. And the scars on the legs and tears in the heavy clothing of the fishermen, who have the task of stripping bear eloquent testimony.

HEAD IS CRUSHED ON GARAGE DOOR

On Truck Being Backed Out of a Garage at Wolfe Island

Kingston, Ont., May 14.—(CP)—Irmgard Schoix, 10-year-old Wolfe Island girl, was instantly killed last night, when her head was crushed against the top of a garage door. The little girl, together with Nathalie Meister, aged six, was on a truck being back out of a garage by Leonard Mosier, Wolfe Island.

Apparently the School girl stood up just as the truck reached the door. Her skull was fractured, the neck broken and the collar bone broken.

Wanted—A Mother

"A baby, who wants him, the darling?
So dimpled and cunning and sweet.
As pure as an angel from heaven,
From his small curly head to his feet.

"What's that, Mrs. Brown, you're too busy,
Yes, bridge takes one's time I have heard
But you, Mrs. Green, hear him laughing—
The sweetest thing ever you heard.

You're afraid that he'd be a trouble
And might turn out badly some day?
Sure babies will always need minding
But who wouldn't have them that way.

"Of course he may wake you at midnight,
He'll be wanting his bottle, the dear,
But as for his turning out badly,
He'll never do that don't you fear.

"For a child will be just what you make him,
Just feel of his wee dimpled hand—
She's gone, baby dear—selfish creature—
And she with a house on the strand.

"Ah, well, perhaps it is better,
'Tis not riches you're needing, but love
Sure Jesus himself has been homeless
And isn't He watching above.

"So I know there is somebody waiting,
With a heartful of love, warm and true,
A mother who's aching to cherish,
A bonnie wee laddie like you.

Biliousness Entirely Checked

Sick since she was 15 years old, Mrs. Walter Smith, 40 Toronto St., Guelph, is now well again. She tells her experience in a legal statement made before a lawyer so you can be sure it is true. Mrs. Smith says: "Since I was 15 years old I was subject to bilious attacks that usually lasted two or three days. They were so severe that I would have to go to bed. The attacks came 2 or 3 weeks apart. No matter what I tried, I got little relief until I started Fruit-a-tives. After taking them for a few weeks I felt in much better health and my biliousness was entirely checked."

Fruit-a-tives are at once natural and scientific. They contain extracts of apples, oranges, figs, prunes and herbs combined with medicinal ingredients in accordance with the formula devised by the famous Canadian doctor who discovered Fruit-a-tives. If you suffer from constipation, indigestion, biliousness, or kindred ills, try Fruit-a-tives at once. You'll be amazed how much better they'll soon make you feel.

Copy of Mrs. Smith's complete legal statement sworn before Miss Frances Louise Loutet, Ottawa, Canada.

Canadian Concert Association Meets Music Problems of Day

Massey Hall Trustees Give Office Gratis to Association to Help Musical Association Serve People of Canada — How the Association is Run

"The ideals of the Canadian Concert Association, which are being carried out with almost religious zest, seem to be the answer to a great national need," said Lawrence Mason, musical and dramatic critic, in a recent issue of The Toronto Globe. Dr. Mason continues:—

"As they are gradually being put into effective operation in towns and villages throughout the Dominion, they constitute a cultural movement of great value in expanding the scope of the existing system of public education. For they specifically care for the needs in certain higher fields of the child, the future citizen, the professional artist, the art student and the community as a whole, thus affording a solution for some of the Nation's most vexatious problems not only in musical matters but also in unemployment, in education, and in civilization, itself."

Dr. Mason goes on—"As evidence of the non-commercial nature of the C.C.A., the fact should be recorded that the trustees of Massey Hall have thought it to recognize the association's splendid contribution to public welfare by giving it an office in Massey Hall for its Dominion headquarters, not only rent free, but with its light bill, its telephone bill, upkeep, etc, paid for as well. So likewise the present article would not have been written if the C.C.A. were a private profit making organization. It is in point of fact, however, a public service institution which will eventually seek a Dominion charter on that footing.

"The Association pays nothing to anyone except the concert-giving artists and the official business manager, who goes out to various towns and conducts the organizing campaigns. Several towns have been "carried" at a loss to the head office to begin with, in the confidence that they would duly carry themselves as soon as they had actually experienced the benefits of the plans; and this confidence has not yet proved ill-founded.

Again The Globe writer says: "It should be mentioned that Milton Blackstone, the founder and director of the Canadian Concert Association, receives no salary for his services. As violist of the celebrated Hart House String Quartet, he has an assured income which enables him with the consent and approval of the trustees of Massey Hall Concert Massey, to devote himself to non-commercial ideals. Consequently the spreading of the C.C.A., plan throughout the whole Dominion has become his ruling passion, because his continual travels from coast to coast with the quartet have shown him the urgent need and the magnificent opportunity for the organization, while at the same time uniquely equipping him, through those same experiences and his business relations with municipal affairs over the country, to direct the association with unrivalled understanding and efficiency."

HITCHING POSTS REMOVED

LONDON, May 14. — (CP) — The many iron hitching posts, which are the boulevards in the Central section of the city are failing before the motor car. Complaints that people stepped out of motor cars bump into the iron poles and also that car doors are damaged on them, are bringing about their removal. They may be given away as souvenirs.

GIFTS PRESENTED TO BRIDAL COUPLE

Cannifton—A happy gathering of friends and neighbors met at Cannifton church Monday evening April 29th to honour Mrs. Perry Hamilton (nee Miss Jean Pepa). The bride and groom were ushered to chairs at the front and before them sat a table decorated with pink and white. Rev. Mr. Merrick called the gathering to order and spoke of the high esteem in which the bride was held in the community. A short program was then given. Mr. Don Williams led in community singing. Solo by Kenneth Tweedy. Reading by Helen Downey and a humorous reading by Evelyn Bellman. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton were called to take chairs behind the decorated table. Miss Eileen Reynolds read an address and Miss Helen Downey and Miss Grace Mills presented Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton with a beautiful silver tea service and vegetable dish.

Following is the address:

April 29th, 1935

To Mrs. Perry Hamilton:—

Dear Jean:—

On this, the happy occasion of your marriage we thought it fitting to gather here for a little social time together as former companions and friends, to recall the many happy occasions that we have shared together even from our public school days, also to review the helpful associations with you in the Sunday School, Young People's Society, Church and Choir. How quickly and pleasantly these years have passed by, but in their passing we have noted with pleasure the keen interest you have shown both in community and especially in our church and choir. We have always found you willing to do your part, to crown our efforts with success. We shall certainly treasure the memories of your helpfulness and kindly co-operation and hope that our association together has been as helpful to you as yours has been to us. While we shall miss your genial presence and helpful services we are sure that other friends in your new community will be favoured with your talent and assistance.

Now as we think of the new and happy venture of your married life we wish you both every happy and successful career. It is often said, that life is largely what we make it; so we are assured that if you carry with you into the future the same genial dispositions expressed by you in all our past associations, then your home will be a centre of gladness and joy, and may it be yours in abundant measure.

However before you leave us we desire to give you a permanent token of our esteem and hearty wishes and ask you to accept these presents as such. Also as a reminder or your many Cannifton friends that in the days of your future successes you will not forget us.

Signed on behalf of your many friends,

Kenneth Tweedy, Marly Gilbert, Helen Downey, Lois Pound, Eileen Reynolds, Grace Mills.

In a few well-chosen words both Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton expressed their thanks for the lovely gifts also inviting them to come and see them in their new home. Mr. S. Bird made a few remarks and everyone joined in singing "For they are jolly good fellows." Lunch was then served and a social hour concluded the happy evening after which the young people enjoyed a charivari.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton will reside on the groom's farm in the 2nd. concession of Sidney.

Recommendation and Petition Pasteurization of Milk, Cream Sold in City Referred Back

City Council Unwilling to Act on Short Notice

LITTLE BUSINESS

Agreement Between Injured Fireman and City Drawn

The recommendation of the Board of Health to the City Council, that all milk and cream sold in the city be pasteurized along with a petition from the Belleville Milk Producers Association asking the same lines was referred back to the committee for further consideration, when they were presented before the city council at their regular meeting held in the council chamber on Monday night.

Dr. G. S. Cronk, Medical Officer of Health, along with members of the Board of Health augmented by producers and dairymen met the council in committee and discussed the question briefly. When the petition was read from the Producers Association by Alderman J. W. Barlow who was in the chair in the committee of the whole, a motion was made to refer it back but Alderman Thompson was against it, more stating "that the council was seating the buck".

"I do not see why this should go back," said Alderman Thompson.

We have been given considerable information on the question in committee and it looks as if the council are afraid to deal with the matter."

Alderman Domenico: "I do not understand this whole proposition and would like a little more intelligence on the question. It is a big matter and requires some study."

Alderman Thompson: "Why did Alderman Domenico ask questions when we were in committee?"

Alderman Marshall: "There is a motion before the table that the matter be referred back. I am not in favor of railroading this question through without considerable thought."

Alderman Sale: "We heard from a number who are in favor of this by-law being passed but we have not heard the negative side as yet and I think the matter should be referred back."

Alderman Foley: "I am sure there all these by-laws restricting certain things are leading to and I am not prepared to vote intelligently on the question. Let the question go back."

Petition Read.

The petition read from the Milk Producers Association and which caused the argument was as follows: "At the regular meeting of the Belleville Milk Producers Association, the undersigned members request the Board of Health, to recommend to the City Council, that they pass a by-law to the effect that all milk and cream used in the City of Belleville be pasteurized on and after August 1, 1935, and that a competent inspector be appointed to see that this law is enforced." On this petition to the Board of Health, that body sent on to the city with a recommendation embodying the request of the petition.

Those signing the petition were William Calvert, S. W. Lough, F. G. Denyes, D. Gibson, H. M. Bonter, J. F. Wellman, John A. Walker, Lorne Sharpe, Frank Milne, C. H. Babbitt, Sherman Babbitt, D. Leeming, E. Leeming, Arthur Blackburn, Stanley May, Fred S. Parrott, Ray Roblin, Ross Roblin, M. Anderson, B. A. Robin, F. P. Reid, H. M. Bonter, George Rush, E. G. Symonds, A. E. Brunnell, D. D. Davidson, W. L. Vandervet, R. E. Gilbert, J. N. Chisholm, J. E. Reed, S. E. Tyrrell.

The Belleville Fire Department were granted the right to hold a tag day on August 3 in order to collect funds to assist in their Christmas Fund for needy children. The Y.O.N. were also granted the right to hold a tag day on June 1. Two lights will be placed near the plant of the Stewart Warner-Alemite and one on the east side of William street. The Stewart Warner was also granted permission for a period of two months from this date to display a radio set, properly bonded, guarded and supervised on Front street at east end of Front street and at west end of the bridge on highway No. 14.

Alderman Arnott enquired as to whether a bond had been furnished by the Bonter Company to protect citizens should the sign erected on the Belvidere Hotel fall and receiving an answer in the negative stated, that the bond should be immediately furnished or else the company be forced to remove the sign. The city solicitor explained to the council that a bond had been furnished but was not satisfactory and had been returned with a bond drawn by himself but the second bond had not been received. The solicitor was instructed to write the company to have the bond furnished immediately.

Fit Fire Hall.

Alderman Hill, Chairman of Fire, explained to the council the condition of number two fire hall, requesting that he be allowed to put in a false ceiling in the sleeping quarters to save heating expenses and a large expenditure to fix the ceiling. His request was granted. An agreement between Edward Clarke, Fireman, who was injured here some years ago and his wife Ella Clarke and the Corporation was made whereby they were paid $2,500.00 providing the agreement is approved by the Compensation Board and their claims against the city for all time is released. The by-law was given only its second reading until after the Board approves. An agreement for the collection of garbage was also authorized between Bert Richardson and the city.

Alderman Marshall gave notice of motion, that he would recommend the alterations at St. Agnes Manor to provide two more apartments. All members of the council were present exception Alderman McCreary. The council adjourned briefly.

Outstanding Courage Shown By Nurses in Red Cross Service

From Whitney and Coe Hill, outposts of the Canadian Red Cross Society, have come three stories of outstanding courage of Canadian nurses.

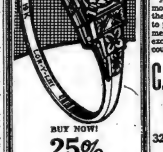
The stories were released by officials of the Belleville Branch of the Red Cross Society.

The first one is from Whitney. One of the nurses there made a call eight miles distance from the outpost to attend a mother who had just given birth to a baby.

Two days passed, and the baby grew ill with bowel obstruction. It was apparent that the baby would have to be taken to a city hospital.

An old automobile was found in the district. Holding it together with her arms, the nurse travelled 100 miles by car to Pembroke hospital, where the child received treatment. The nurse had then been on duty with the child for forty hours of active hours.

The second story concerns one of the nurses situated at the Red Cross Outpost at Coe Hill. One day she was called to a log cabin, seven miles from the Outpost. There she found six children and two adults in one ill-lighted room.



The mother was in convulsions. The nurse sent a neighbour back to Coe Hill to telephone the nearest doctor at Bancroft, 32 miles away. The doctor came by car.

When he arrived, he ordered the patient to be taken to Bancroft at once. An improvised bed was prepared up in the back of the car. In this manner, over back-country roads, the patient was brought to Bancroft, Outpost for treatment. The nurse on this case worked from early morning to late at night to save the woman's life.

The third story comes out of Coe Hill, too. It occurred last winter when the weather was 40 degrees below zero. The Red Cross nurse was called from the Outpost, at 1 a.m. to attend an emergency case eight miles in the back country over a bush road. The nurse had to hide her face behind the driver of the sleigh to escape the freezing. The driver had his nose, ears and cheeks frozen. The horse was white with frost. Seven hours later, the patients attended to, the nurse was on her way back to the Outpost.

When service such as this is considered, is it any wonder that some 50,000 Canadian settlers look upon the Red Cross Outpost service as something beyond price—that something that means security for their families, their only security, anytime or occasion may befall, or at the times of childbirth.

STRIKE ENDS

Toledo, O., May 14—(AP)—The three-week strike at the Chevrolet auto plant here ended today and plant officials moved quickly to return to full speed production.

The union workers who voted 723 to 385 to end the strike were divided, however, in their opinion of the settlement. James Bolaski, chairman of the strike committee, described the result as a "dirty deal."

The vote followed a stormy meeting during which Francis J. Dillon, American Federation of Labor organizer for the United States automobile industry, declared the local United Automobile Workers Federal Union suspended from the National organization.

AT THE BELLE
"Private World"

In her first, motion picture appearance since she won the Motion Picture Academy award for 1934, Claudette Colbert proves her right to that prize and again demonstrates her startling versatility in a role entirely different from her past ones. The picture is Walter Wanger's, psychological love drama, "Private World", opening a two-day engagement at the Belle today, matinee daily.

Cast in the leading role of a daring and intelligent picture that sweeps aside all the old illusions about love to show the inhibitions, complexes and repressions that are the true villains of romance, Miss Colbert appears as a trimly efficient, cool and capable woman doctor; a woman seemingly without personal affections but with a great love for the suffering.

Miss Colbert and Joel McCrea are carrying on important scientific work in their posts at a hospital for the insane when the appointment of a new doctor, Charles Boyer, as head of the hospital, disrupts their little world.

McCrea is attached to his quiet and dependent little wife, Joan Bennett but he is first and from her by Boyer's vampire sister. The antagonism between Miss Colbert and Loyer flares up. Changes in hospital routine causes riots in the ward and a serious situation.

Finally, Joan Bennett, who has learned of her husband's infidelity, collapses and is faced with a possible loss of her mind. In her desperate and successful efforts to unsnarl the tangle of their lives Miss Colbert reveals depths in her true colors. She learns that she has been using refuge from love in the memory of a dead sweetheart and that her apparent hatred for Boyer actually conceals a growing love for him.

Phyllis Bottome's successful novel of the same name furnished the scriptural for "Private World" which was skillfully directed by Gregory La Cava.

Joel McCrea and Joan Bennett rendered particularly praiseworthy performances in roles that give them ample opportunity for real display of their talents. Jean Hinds, Jean Rouveral and Big Boy Williams stand out in minor roles.

Also Latest Short Treats

Edwin C. Hill introduces the Radio Vagabonds of Fashion, "She's Ity Lily" a delightful and tuneful comic musical comedy with a cast of popular fun-makers, and "Isle of Vienna Woods", a beautiful Pathe Sportlight specialist. A Gorgeous Technicolor will be exhibited on the same program.

Daily performances start at 2.30, 7.22 and 9.10, the feature offering "Private World" commences at 2.45, 7.40 and 9.36 p. m.

AT THE CAPITOL
"The Fountain"

Has Love Crisis Behind the Battle Front

One of the most novel personal dramas of the World War without a single scene of military action, comes in the current production, "The Fountain", starring Ann Harding. It presents a crisis in the lives of a group of people thrown together in Holland, where many of the aristocrats from various nations are interned. Although the locale is neutral territory, the progress of the war is mirrored in their hearts and in the emotions is continually waged.

Ann Harding is seen as a beautiful countess united through a loveless marriage with a military officer. When she encounters a former sweetheart in the person of an English aviator, the romantic spark is rekindled and burns brightly until the husband returns from the battlefield a cripple. How he discovers his wife's new romance and yet by the devotion of the two lovers by his noble philosophy leads to a happy-ending climax.

Brian Aherne, direct from recent successes on the English screen, carries the role of the lover, while Paul Lukas is seen as the husband. Additional intrigue is introduced by Sara Haden, well known character actress, who portrays the part of a countess, in love with the German officer.

John Cromwell directed "The Fountain," which is the screen version of a classic piece of fiction by Charles Morgan. Over twenty supporting players are in the cast including Jean Hersholt, Ralph Forbes, Violet Kemble-Cooper, Andonia Amendt and Barbara Barondess.

Several excellent short subjects including a comedy and musical reels precede the feature presentation.

Tomorrow Only
"The Blue Danube"

In answer to numerous requests we are bringing back "The Blue Danube", for a one-day engagement, Wednesday only.

Story of "The Blue Danube" is vivid and colorful, and concerns a beautiful Hungarian girl, who, when visiting Budapest with the Romany Band at the request of a family friend, meets Charlie who, after leading a very different in the town, and while on leave for the freedom of their green forest the other becomes enamoured of the gay creature. The fury of the town is fascinated with the boy, and dated at attracting her, he momentarily forgets his gypsy love. Realization of his folly brings him back to the girl turns away and he will have none of the townswoman who has broken his life, even though she offers him sympathy and help. The complications of several unexpected twists, keeping the interest alive from the start.

Charlie Rode, who was heard but seen briefly in "Carnival" has quite a prominent role in "The Blue Danube". As king of the gypsies and leader of their band, he proves himself a film actor of no mean ability. The Trignano music will charm the feet out of you, while gay abandoned rhythms and the gypsy love songs enchant you.

A complete change of short featurettes will be shown at each performance.

Complete shows 2.30; 7.15; 9.15.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, May 14 (AP)—Oils, metals, rails and scattered specialties displayed further improvement in today's stock market. The rallies, however, were soft.

The Morgenthau money speech did not prove an exceptional market influence although it may have, indirectly, aided some of the mining issues.

Gainers of fractions to around a point or so included Seaboard Oil, Standard Oils of California and New Jersey, Barnsdall, U. S. Smelting, Cerro De Pasco, Howe Sound, Alaska Pe, Union Pacific, General Motors, Chrysler, U. S. Gypsum, General Electric and Electric Auto-Lite. The bale line was steady. Transfers approximated 2,150,000 shares.

TORONTO MINES CLOSE

Toronto, May 14 (CP)—Despite the sizeable advance in the bar silver price, the white metal stocks settled down at a level around the previous close. Cobalt Contact and Peterson-Cobalt sold four cents higher.

Sherritt Gordon closed slightly higher with the day's sale at 7. Hudson Bay, Bradtory Bash, Base Metals Corporation and Mining Corporation were stronger.

Central Patricia, McKenzie and God's Lake closed unchanged. Little Long Lac weakened about 10 cents. Pickle Crow and Macassa improved on the down side.

Silvers and Base Metals firmed today in sympathy with the higher quotation on bar silver while the golds were slow during the morning and somewhat more active and strong in the early afternoon.

A jump of more than a cent for silver gave Eldorado, Castle and Reed an advance of 4 to 5 cents each and in the Base Metals higher prices were hoarded for Sherritt Gordon, Falconbridge, Mining Corporation and Hudson Bay. Noranda, however, back to $38.75 for a loss of 26 cents.

Heavy trading developed in God's Lake, Central Patricia, Little Long Lac and Macassa, with prices irregularly higher. Central Patricia had a gain of 7 cents this afternoon. Dome and Teck Hughes did better.

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, May 14—(CP)—Oils continued to pace the list. International Petroleum added more than half a point and Imperial and British American small fractions. Consolidated finished about the same. Western Common and Distillers Seagrams had gains ranging up to a half point. Industrial Alcohol A finished slightly lower.

Consumers' Gas surged three points and the Quebec Power issues 1-4 to 1-2 each. Bell Telephone closed with a slightly better tone. Brazilian 4, Pr. Tr. and Steel A led ground narrowly. Lower prices ruled for Dominion Steel, Dominion Bridge and Canada Cement A.

The industrial share section was engaged in consolidation. Its position today following a week of general strength and there were periods of irregularity in the oils and metals holding to the up side. The tobacco issues showed some firmness in the morning session but gains were dropped later in the day.

During the morning buying Consolidated Smelters responded to the higher bar silver price by pushing forward to 106 and nicket to 29. Both were selling a little below these prices this afternoon. Consumers Gas was weak and Bell Telephone was a half point up.

Higher prices ruled for the oils. International Petroleum at 27 3-8 had a gain of 1-2 and British American gained 1-8 to 15 1-8 and Imperial held steady at 19 1-2.

poses," the Minister charged. "Can you blame him? In the circumstances, who wouldn't be mad? The Callander bonanza didn't materialize for him—but I think the general public will be glad that one of the babies struck gold."

The Minister said the parents received $100 a month as living expenses and he regarded this as adequate for all their needs.

"And we've offered to build them a new home," he went on. "On the advice of their legal representatives they turned it down. We hope they may reconsider this decision."

Educate Children

The Dionnes were being offered the best available education for the elder children and Mr. Croll said the authorities would be well satisfied if they accepted.

"Never can it be said that we've been forgetful of the parents and the quintuplets' brothers and sisters," he continued. "We are eager to help them and I think that changed conditions at Callander may shortly make it possible for us to do so."

Mr. Croll said under the contracts entered into last year the parents would have received "scant" return for the risks undergone by the babies. Seventy per cent of all proceeds—nearly $125,000 up to now—would have gone to the promoter, said the Minister and 30 per cent, about $50,000 to the parents. "But not a penny," he said, "would have gone to the children's fund."

Dissatisfaction with what we've accomplished," continued the Minister, "as it stands now, is being voiced by many sturdy, still-living Callander, with the door of their hospitality open to parents at any time. Physically and financially the quintuplets are doing very well indeed. Our part is complete."

Hears Drive Launched

Ottawa, May 14 (CP)—The Ottawa Journal learns an effort is being launched to have the Dionne quintuplets returned to their parents.

The Journal says:—

"One spokesman said appeals to the Canadian Government were only starting and 'no stone would be left unturned to obtain results.'

"The natural rights of parents to bring up their own children, be they quintuplets, or quintuplets, will be a chief reason in support of representations to be made, it was said.

"Associations will be told Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne are in a position to bring up their own children and should they be allowed to do so they will receive the co-operation of relatives, many of whom have gained prominence in ecclesiastical circles."

Cousins in Church

"Rev. Father Hector Legros, Professor of Literature at Ottawa University, a cousin of the Dionne quintuplets, and Rev. Father Legros, brother of Father Hector Legros, and Father Antonio Talbot, both of Mont Joli, Que.

"In addition to these five priests and five members of the order of Christian brothers Mrs. Dionne has two cousins who are nuns, one who are holding high offices as superiors in institutions administering to the religious order.

"Father Hector Legros declined to comment on the matter.

Mrs. Dionne Very Sad

"When questioned about the rumor he thought a visit to Callander, Ontario, next Saturday in company with other members of the order, who are priests, he replied in the affirmative and said he was motoring there. It was learned that Father Legros visited Mrs. Dionne a week ago and he returned to Ottawa rather worried over the declining health of Mrs. Dionne. The mother of the quintuplets, it is said, is living in a constant state of sadness.

"Officials of several religious orders, including some of the Ottawa orders, were asked to send messages to Callander but no response was forthcoming. A refusal was also received from a religious order with headquarters outside of Ottawa diocese, the reason being it would not be a wise thing to have sisters in charge of the hospital while there was so much opposition to present conditions.

Angela Joyce Not Successful In Suit Brought

LONDON, May 14.—(AP)— Miss Angela Joyce, the "Miss England" of 1930, lost her breach of promise suit against Lord Revelstoke, wealthy yachtsman, today.

A jury in the Old Bailey, which included three women, required only half an hour to reach a verdict for the defendant.

Costs of the action were assessed against Miss Joyce.

The beauty contest winner, who changed her name from Ivy Dawkins, when she went on the stage, testified Lord Revelstoke, Rupert Baring, before his succession to the peerage, proposed to her several times, while he was in school at Cambridge. Once he popped the question in her bedroom, she asserted.

This Lord Revelstoke flatly denied, telling the court the question of marriage only came up between them when Miss Joyce herself raised it. He told her he was not interested, he testified.

In closing the young peer's attorney gave the lie direct to the actress.

A "patent lie" was the way he characterized the accusation. Lord Revelstoke resumed their association after seven months of separation, while he called a "transparent lie" her assertion he had written to her after the "Cambridge period".

Judge Sums Up

Justice Swift, in charging the jury said:

"A man doesn't promise to marry a woman by saying 'you're the sweetest girl I've ever met.'"

To win her case, he said, Miss Joyce had to prove Lord Revelstoke Revelstoke had contracted to marry her.

Counsel for Lord Revelstoke told the court the action "has not merely its origin in the essence of its cruelty is that it is false".

"This case was brought for money and where that is done a case can be bought off," the Attorney General told the jury. "It is for the jury, "It is to Lord Revelstoke's honor he has resisted the attempt to the last".

The defendant's counsel condemned him for "confessing to a boyish infatuation" for the comely actress and ending the humiliation, of having his letters to her read in court.

Lord Revelstoke, in his final appearance on the witness stand, testified he was a confirmed bachelor had neither proposed to Miss Joyce nor written her love letters, and concluded his studied at Cambridge.

TANGLED LIVES

By ANN FORESTER

KITTY DAWSON
CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Joyce seemed to herself to have dropped through the hard dry crust of her former existence into a strange dim country with no definite geography or boundaries. By the end of the second week of her neighbours acquaintance with Stanley she was vaguely uneasy.

Not that Nadine went in for excursions entertaining or gay cafe parties. On the contrary, her life was so refining as to accord with the quiet in the yellow apartment never began until noon and seldom swung into full tempo until the lights were lit.

Nadine appeared to have no intimate outside of Len Bates and Jeff Therrold. She rarely lunched in rooms shopping—at matinees—or in some newly opened tea room. Joyce was always accompanied her now, but the girl felt that until she had come into the city she had never wandered about alone exquisitely pressing expensively dressed, dreamily aloof.

Now and then Len Bates would bring up some men to Nadine's apartment. On rare occasions they were accompanied by women—never by any chance their wives. Perfectly manicured women with elaborate street eyes.

They would make up bridge four—sometimes one table sometimes two, playing until the early morning hours while Joyce sat behind the highballs which the silent Louey Mae mixed in the kitchen.

If Nadine was needed to make the correct number at the table, she would put on her growing sharper and whiter as the night waxed later her eyes heavy lidded and cautious.

She was not needed, she would sit on the Chesterfield with Joyce, smoking nervously. Crushing out one cigarette before it was half smoked only to light another immediately with her diamond studded lighter. By the time the game broke up, the deep cloisonne ashtray would be filled with broken ends stained with orange lipstick.

Startling sums passed over the little gold topped tables. Watching fascinated, while she pretended to concentrate on the pages of a magazine, Joyce found herself wondering what Kara Slade would do should he suddenly lose all his himself sitting in this game. Nickie pinching Feral . . . he would probably have heart failure. Joyce decided with a flash of her old humour.

Now and then Jeff Therrold came up to play. He played well and as a rule won heavily. Yet at intervals throughout the evening Joyce would feel his bold black eyes moving over her body in a sort of sly caress.

Several times he had taken her to night clubs in company with Nadine and Len Bates. They had ended until the grey light was flooded with dawn. But the girl evaded all suggestions to go out with him alone. Something of sinister power about this man under his assumed good nature, Joyce thought which frightened her.

There were other small things making Joyce uneasy. One day she was left alone before the dressing table in Nadine's bedroom. The four of them were going out to some new cafe Len Bates had discovered.

Joyce had closed the door as she went in here to sit down on the vanity bench and comb her hair. Apparently the latch had not caught for the door swung softly open again and stood half ajar.

Joyce had noticed the coppery mass of her hair and had combed it loosely back into a soft knot at her neck when her eyes were suddenly caught by a movement in the depth of the mirror. Her gaze plunged past her own reflection—plunged across the hall to the living room. She saw Len Bates handing some money to Nadine.

Bridge losses ..... Joyce was explaining to the rather shocked girl who looked back at her from the mirror. Or, perhaps, the profit on some stock which Nadine had requested Len to buy for her. Oh, there could be a hundred reasons why Len Bates should give Nadine money.

The violet eyes staring back at her from the glass became a trifle defiant. Well—it was none of her affair . . . and anyway—why quibble? Weren't Nadine and Len going to be married? But in her heart Joyce was shaken. Hard and meagre as existence had been in Riverton, it had been charged with a rigid morality. Something inherently decent in the girl revolted at the scene she had witnessed.

Joyce was very silent at dinner that night, and though she did not return home until three in the morning, she forced herself to slip out of bed quietly at seven, leaving Nadine still asleep in the darkened bedroom.

All this barbaric hour Louey Mae had not put in an appearance. Joyce sat in the disordered living room amid the ashtrays and the crumpled glasses. Curled in a corner of the Chesterfield she marked the Want Ads in the morning paper which stated "Experience Unnecessary".

After dressing hastily, she went out of the house to find a humid breaking day. Now and then some men looking at her with unchecked interest—impossible not to feel interest in anything so young and lovely. But no one seemed interested in giving her a position.

By mid-afternoon the city was simmering in the three o'clock heat haze. Joyce felt sick and dizzy. Her feet burned from the hot pavements. She forced herself to make one last call. Up to the fifth of a tall office building to an employment agency. A stout woman looked coldly at the tired girl through gleaming glasses. There was nothing just now, but voice cooled, but Joyce could make out an application blank.

Joyce sat down at an ink-stained table and read the yellow slip. Her name . . . her age . . . her religion . . . And down at the bottom—Former experience. She left that blank. Then she rested in a stagnation, Joyce found herself wondering what Kara Slade would do should he suddenly lose all his himself sitting in this game. Nickie pinching Feral . . . he would probably have heart failure. Joyce decided with a flash of her old humour.

Now and then Jeff Therrold came up to play. He played well and as a rule won heavily. Yet at intervals throughout the evening Joyce would feel his bold black eyes moving over her body in a sort of sly caress.

Several times he had taken her to night clubs in company with Nadine and Len Bates. They had ended until the grey light was flooded with dawn. Joyce had noticed the coppery mass of her hair and had combed it loosely back into a soft knot at her neck not want to introduce Joyce to Kitty Dawson. The girl knew this from the vicious way Nadine ground out her cigarette and immediately reached for another.

There was surprise in Kitty Dawson's piercing blue eyes as she acknowledged the introduction.

Joyce passed into the bedroom she heard her say in a booming whisper which was no doubt intended for a discreet aside "Who's the beautiful redhead, Nanny and why on earth is the kid staying with you?"

Listening intently Joyce heard Nadine's angry little laugh. Heard her murmured reply but could not make out the words.

A strange little silence there in the other room.

The girl in the bedroom found herself standing tense. What had Nadine said . . .?

Then Kitty Dawson's hearty voice. "Well, let's get back to brass tacks. Frankly that's what I came here for, Nanny. I've got to get two hundred somehow. Three of us nurses have banded together. We're out to raise a thousand, what we can't give ourselves. Two hundred will buy an auto. They had to amputate both legs. It was the old own fault—he darted in front of the car—you know what I mean. I'll do it. So they can't collect damages, of course, though they can't help how I happened to interest myself in the cause."

All the time Kitty Dawson was speaking she was watching the girl curiously. Joyce was fumbling with the catch of the handbag, blinded by sudden nervous tears. She held out a five dollar bill in a shaking hand.

"Take this, won't you please? I—I'm awful anxious to help. I wish I could make it more—"

She checked herself at the arrival of the elevator with its resplendent operator.

"Sure, Kitty love," she crumpled bill. "that'll help a lot." She tucked it in her own black handbag. Looked at the girl curiously.

"Gosh!" the words exploded from her as though against her will "I don't see how in heck a girl like you would—would—Oh well . . . I'll be seeing you, kid." Waiting car. "Thanks a lot. If you ever want me to sit in at the Central Hospital.

"And now why the devil did I add that?" Kitty asked herself mentally as the car bore her down to the street.

Joyce walked down the hall with her head bent. What did Kitty Dawson mean by jeering at her that way? And what did she mean by that unfinished remark? "Why a girl like you would—" Would what?

When Joyce re-entered the apartment, Nadine was sitting before the mirror powdering her face. She flashed a quick look at the girl and there was hidden anger in her dark eyes. But Nadine's voice was honey-sweet—almost apologetic when she spoke.

"I'll be seeing you after an hour for you," he said gently. "Nadine let me to tell you we'd put out evening things. We'll probably come back and dance later. I'll go on down and wait for you in the car while you get ready."

The consideration of that was her. After all, so long as she was Nadine's guest she could not refuse to consider her wishes . . .

Joyce went into the bedroom after Jeff Therrold had left the apartment.

With a thoughtfulness unusual in her, Nadine had left evening things on the bed. Joyce snuggled her breath at the exquisite dress of ivory satin which she found there. A new dress of Nadine's, she thought, as she slipped it over her head. And what a perfect fit for her! She had worn other evening clothes of Nadine's when the four of them had gone out dancing but none had fitted her like this frock. It might have been made for her.

A radiant reflection looked back from the glass, an unexpected picture, outlined in the scant folds of white satin. Youth rebounds and under the stimulant of pretty clothes Joyce knew that she had never looked so lovely. Her hair was a copper helmet clasping the lovely oval of her face and she recalled a remark of Norman's . . . that her eyes were like pools of purple ink.

Norman . . . she thought of him was unreal—fading like a figure in an old photograph. He could not even hurt her now . . . so far she had come in a few short weeks.

Nadine had left a set of beryl ornaments for her use. A pendant on a platinum chain, like a drop of clearest seawater; and a linked bracelet of the same greenish blue stones.

When Joyce went down to the car, wrapped in Nadine's black velvet evening cape, Jeff Therrold and the latter lip in appreciative admiration.

"Where is this Eagle Nook?" Joyce asked as she took her place beside Nadine.

"Out of town a bit—" He started the engine. "Quaint little place in the country where they have a wonderful dinner."

Little place in the country, and I'm dressed up as though to meet the King of England!" Joyce made a gay little mockery of her dress. Therrold's black gaze shifted around to her face for a moment and he spoke slowly. "Ever since I laid eyes on you I've wanted to see you in white satin and bery."

Something helpless and frightened leaping in her heart. She felt that her eyes went wide and dark. It took all of her reason to thrust back the panic.

"I'm flattered!" She gave a nervous little laugh. "Wasn't it lucky that Nadine bought a white satin dress! It's such a lovely evening thing I feel guilty about wearing it."

"It's the sort of thing you should always wear," the man replied. "Beautiful things belong to you. Your beauty gives you the right to them."

"Oh, you mustn't say such pleasant things!" She was trying desperately to keep a light tone running through the words. "I know that I won't be able to get my hair on tomorrow. Beautiful things indeed! The thing which would look the most beautiful to me just now is an honest-to-goodness bob. I've been looking for work all day. I've walked my feet off . . . I'm ready to cry this disappointment!" Instead of crying she gave a shaky little laugh.

Easy Chance Muffled and Leafs Win from Baltimore

Toronto In Virtual Tie For the Leadership With Bears

By the Associated Press

As a result of their ability to win at home, Toronto Maple Leafs, winners of the play-offs in the International League last year, today were virtually tied for the lead with Newark Bears, who led the circuit through the regular season in 1934.

Since opening their home stand against the "southern" clubs, the Leafs have chalked up nine victories in 13 games, to climb from fourth place to within 10 points of the Bears. In contrast Newark has won only four of its last nine contests. As a result the standings today read: Newark, won 15, lost 8, pct. .652; Toronto, won 16, lost 10, pct. .615.

The Leafs won their ninth game since returning home yesterday in coming back Baltimore Orioles 5-3. However, the victory was something of a gift. The Orioles went into the ninth deadlocked at three all. With two out and runners on first and second, Eddie Miller tried a high fly to short left. Both George Puccinelli and Bob Coleman went after it but then pulled an Alphonse and Gaston act with the result the ball dropped safely. Miller then had batted for pitcher Davis, ran home with the deciding tally.

Montreal Royals, themselves a pretty good home team with nine victories in seven, helped the cause of the Leafs by trouncing the Bears 5-0. Paul Dean pitched a strikingly responsible for the Bears' defeat. In winning his fourth straight game against one defeat this season, he let the league-leaders down with five hits and only one run in eight innings but was touched for two more runs on four hits after he was taken out in the ninth.

Ward Cross held Albany Senators to four hits while Rochester Red-wings mapped out of their four-game losing streak with a 6-4 victory. Cross also drove in the first two runs with a single in the third and. The game as as at the result on the Gene Moore's home run with a mate on base in the ninth.

Ollie Carnegie's long single in the 10th drove in the run that gave the Buffalo Bisons a 4-3 victory over the Syracuse Chiefs.

Accident Ends Playing Days

New York, May 14 (AP)—Vincent Richards' tennis-playing days are over.

The former United States Davis Cup player, a professional since 1926, suffered injuries in an automobile accident last week that spelled the end of tournament competition from him.

Still in a hospital at Brewsville, Richards philosophically accepted the situation.

"As a matter of fact, I was thinking about cutting down on my tennis. It was taking too much time from my business, which is important to me. I'll be neglected. It has been fun and I have no regrets."

Richards, 32, has been a topflight performer for nearly 20 years. At 15, he won the United States doubles championship with big Bill Tilden.

C. boxing card to be presented at the arena on Wednesday night. Eight bouts in all will be presented, including four inter-city scraps between Belleville and Ottawa boxers.

SOFTBALL

Making their bits count into runs the College Hill Cubs elevated their percentage in the local Wall Street softball league by trimming the Ad'mans by the score of 7 to 5 in the first softball game of the current season to be played at Cenotaph Park. Frank Farraro was on the mound for the losing Aajmans, who hurled three hit ball, but issued walks, coupled with a timely hit by Jack Shane gave the Cubs their two runs and victory. Eddie Schrieder hurled consistent ball for the victorious Cubs, restricting the Aajmans to five scattered hits and two runs.

The lineups:

Cubs: J. Barriage, Cy Barriage, Morgan Reid, Leichford, W. Leichford, Robinson, Jenkinson and Schrieder.

Aajmas, A.C.—Tuttle, H. Hennessey, Fredericks, Jordan, Kiser, H. Bawden, Clark, Murray and Farraro.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

"Are you interested in trout fishing, young man?" an old time angler queried us recently. "Well, not exactly, but why the personal interest?" we quizzed. "Well, sir, I've been trying to catch the elusive brook trout years and just got tripped up to a new wrinkle," he says. It seems that "Old Timer" has been in the habit of discarding his dark colored flies in the late evening when the shadows begin to fall, being of the opinion that the trout are unable to see the lighter colored flies as darkness sets in. After laying aside the dark fly our informant would select a light colored one, believing Mr. Trout would be able to see it more plainly. Recently "Old Timer" continued using the dark fly after sundown with most gratifying results. "You see the trout when looking up from the depths see the darker colored flies against the skyline more readily. We cannot dispute "Old Timer" on the subject as he had authentic evidence in a slice spring of speckled trout to prove his theory. There's the suggestion and we're likely to get the well known punch in the nozzle for "letting the cat out of the bag."

A recent issue of the magazine "Kennel and Bench" carried a tribute to Walter H. Reeves, local dog fancier. The magazine devotes its columns solely to the sport and care of dogs of every type. The article published recalls how for the 30 judges to officiate at the Morris and Reeves Show to be held at Giralda Farms, N.J., on the 25th. instant, Walter H. Reeves of Belleville, Ont., will have charge of the Fox Terrier ring and will judge Wire- and Smooths in the same class. Mr. Reeves is considered one of the best judges of dogs on the continent." The above is a fitting tribute to Mr. Reeves, whose services are always in demand at the larger dog shows and exhibitions as an authority and judge.

Newton Thompson, secretary of the C.O.B.L. mailed out the league's proposed 1935 schedule yesterday and we find the teams will participate in 48 games, each club having 12 games at home and the same number on the road. Each of the three other clubs in the loop will visit Belleville four times. Two double-headers have been arranged, between Kingston and Oshawa, one each place. The league opens on May 22nd. at Kingston and May 24th. at Belleville and Peterboro. closing Saturday, August 17th when Peterboro journeys to Oshawa Belleville also finishes their portion of the schedule at home with the hooky Ponies on August 18th. Belleville has two holiday dates—May 24 and Civic Holiday, one Wednesday, two Friday and seven Tuesday dates. Likely the holiday fixtures will be played in the morning while the games after June 1st, will be twilight affairs. We hope the release of the schedule will pacify the Kingston sport commissioner, who requested his trusty cudgel and started in to wield it in the general direction of the league officials recently.

Now that the Aajmas Club has been received into the Canadian Canoe Association and there is a possibility that a new canoe group may be formed within this district-inside of the next two years, it is high time the local organization dropped that funny moniker and adopted a regular name. First of all very few can properly pronounce the word Aajmas, while even less are the members of the club know what the letters actually stand for. Already there is a movement afoot to change the name of the club, as they now sponsor major sports in the city such as canoeing, rugby, football, lacrosse, and soccer. Then it has been suggested that the club be called the "Metro Athletic Club", a very suitable and fitting name in the local Canoeing Centre Bill Fry represented the club in Ottawa over the week end and was respectfully given the task over the name "Aajmas." He was being made to have the Peterboro Canoe Club organization with the final decision that Gananoque, Belleville and Peterboro be known as the Eastern District canoe branch and later, possibly, Kingston may join the fold. Incidentally the local padding contingent will be headed by Carl Graber, three C. C. A. singles champion, who is at present living here.

Believing that it would be an added attraction to their Friday night wrestling show the Kiwanis Club sport committee announced today that Jackie Forbes well known Toronto wrestling referee would be engaged to officiate as the third man in the ring for the bouts. Forbes has had a world of experience and is considered by some the premier wrestling referee on the continent. He will handle the main bout between Johnnie Gyroffy and Al Dunlop.

Promoter Glen Allen announced today that his eighth bout for Wednesday night's Stewart-Warner-Alemite A.C. boxing card would be between Mark Sierra and Doggie Robinson at 126 lbs. Sierra and Robinson have met previously in a local ring and have always pleased the fans. These two lads will open the show and providing they stage one of their old-time grudge fights a real three rounds of action can be looked for. "Frenchy" D'Aoust of Ottawa today is the effect that all of the Capital City boxers would be on hand for our show. They are all reported to be in the pink of conditions and ready to battle the local district champs. Promoter Allen stated. Eight bouts in all will be on the card that features the "Dynamite" Wheeler is a bout with "Flash" Kippon, the featherweight champion of the Ottawa District.

At last the Bay of Quinte Intermediate O.B.A.A. league awoke after many months of slumber and got down to real business last night when four clubs entered the loop at Napanee. Apparently President Charlie Loucks and his henchmen read our yesterday's report that I went to press as the annual meeting of the league was called late yesterday afternoon. At any rate the Gananoque club joined Mr. Ito in with the B.A.B.A. Picton and the Napanee Globards to form a strong intermediate loop in the main. Incidentally the local intermediates open activities on May 24th. In a twilight game at Gananoque, while Picton journeys to Napanee. As previously stated the Wards are rated as an intermediate "A" team while the remaining three clubs are intermediate "B", but the sticker in the proceedings is that the Globards must finish first in the Bay of Quinte schedule in order to qualify for the Intermediate A play-downs. Somewhat of a tough proposition for the Globard-Comer outfit.

Eight teams signified their intention of competing in the Mercantile Softball League this season. The clubs met last night and quietly talked over matters pertaining to the league's welfare, which is good, for softballers out of their organization which it is it should be. The meeting adjourned until Friday night when all team managers are expected to be on hand as the Recreation Alleys early enough to get away to the wrestling bouts.

OAKMONT COURSE A BIG HEADACHE

Former Greats in Golf World Eliminated in Qualifying Round

New York, May 14 (CP)— There was new evidence today the Oakmont District (Pa.) course will be one large headache for competitors in the United States open golf championship starting June 6.

Simultaneously with 22 other districts, the Pittsburgh sectional qualifying round for the open was played over the Oakmont course and so tough was the course nobody could break 150 for the 36-hole medal play test and a 73 was the best individual round of the day. The last qualifier in the section, Bob Grahash of Pittsburgh, got in with rounds of 76-77-153.

All told the sectional rounds on 22 courses produced 108 qualifiers for the open—88 professionals and 20 amateurs. The Chicago district test will qualify 11 more next Saturday. With 40 players exempt from the preliminary rounds, the total field at Oakmont thus will be 162.

Two former amateur champions, Max Marston of Philadelphia and S. Davidson Herron at Pittsburgh, were among those eliminated yesterday as were the big ten stars, Johnny Fischer at Cincinnati and Chuck Kocsis at Detroit. The two-time Canadian amateur champion, Bobby Campbell at Seattle.

The New York district took its toll of such professionals as Bill Methhorn, Leonard Macomber, Klein, Johnny M. Kinder and Joe Turnesa. Francis Ouimet, Ab Grossbaro and Roland Hancock at Boston were among the other pros, who fell by the wayside.

Among the successful bidders, however, were former open golf champions—Willie MacFarlane and Johnny Farrell at New York; Walter Hagen at Detroit, and the Omaha amateur, Johnny Goodman, in his home town district.

Schoolboy Rowe Back in Form Hands Yankees a Shutout by Allowing Only Four Singles

Rowe, However, Always Has Had Success Against Yanks

WESTERN TEAMS WIN

By Herbert W. Barker

Associated Press Sports Writer

The schoolboy hasn't been getting along so well this season but Detroit Cochrane, manager of the champion Detroit Tigers, tossed him in there yesterday against the invading Yankees and Rowe responded with a brilliant performance that reminded Ajer fans of his sensational pitching of last year.

Arrayed against Vernon Gomez, star of the Yankee staff, Rowe held the New Yorkers to four singles and shut them out 3-0. Rowe, who won 36 games for the Tigers a year ago, leading the Yankees five times in a row, has had all kinds of trouble getting started this campaign. He had won only one game, that in a relief role, and lost three, pitching one complete game in all until the Yankees came to town.

Against his pet "cousins," however, Rowe was invincible. Red Rolfe beat out a bunt in the sixth and stole to third on Gehrig's single but Tony Lazzeri hit into a double play to spoil the only chance the Yankees had to score. The Tigers got to work in the second on Rolfe's throw to first on a walk, Gerald Walker's single and Charley Gehringer's long fly. They picked up another run in the third on a walk to Pat Mullin in left, a single by Gehringer and a single by Hank Greenberg.

It is the only other chance the League game of the day, Wes Ferrell held St. Louis Browns to five hits and walloped a home run in the seventh to account for the Boston Red Sox's 2-1 victory.

National League

A full baseball schedule in the National League saw the four western clubs gain on the leading the east, score a win.

Leo Durocher's 10th inning home run broke up a great pitching duel at New York between Carl Hubbell of the Giants and Bill Walker of the Cardinals with the latter getting the Cards a 3-2 victory. Walker allowed only six hits and might have had a shutout had he been able to take care of Joe Moore, who doubled to score runs to keep the Giants in the game.

The three-hit pitching of young Bill Lee plus a brilliant defence carried the Chicago Cubs to a 2-0 victory over Brooklyn Dodgers. The Dodgers, in second place, a game and a half behind the Cubs, found Lee and Lon Warneke in the pinches to keep the Cubs out to four performances. Babe Herman, Tony Cuccinello, Lee and Galan gave the Cubs two runs and the ball game in the first inning.

Laboriously, Roger Cecil succeeded in freeing himself from the tangled parachute rigging. The burning remnants of his airplane lay in a clearing close by. An hour later he heard the whirr of motors skyward.

In the clear light of morning, after the terrible India monsoon that nearly finished him, he saw two scout planes of the "Crimson Squadron" winging solve him. Luckily, his yellow flier had followed him from the captured city of the Maharajah.

Avoiding the storm, they had seen his body drop from the drooped plane. Searching, they rescued the young Englishman, but found no trace of his crew or of Patricia Canby. Reluctantly, Roger was forced to admit the quest hopeless.

Finally he allowed the fliers to take him back to Delhi. Long he grieved for the once happy girl who had captured his young heart. Only the knowledge that he had d'e his best to save her comforted him at all.

Daily Short Story

The News Hound

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

"Have to make a phone call, honey," said Tom, "Be right back!" Left alone in the car, Doris spent the first five minutes in wondering if it would be wise, after all, to marry Tom Wellington. Apparently a reporter could never forget his newspaper. It was not the first time, by any means, that she had been left to the resonance of solitary meditation while Tommy dashed to a phone booth and relayed a story to the desk.

"Well," she thought, "if it's only the desk he's phoning and not another girl, I really can't complain."

With a resigned little sigh, she felt in his overcoat pocket for the compact she had given him to keep for her. But her hand discovered instead something soft and silky. In amazement she pulled out a long, tan silk stocking. A woman's silk stocking!

"That's that!" Tom remarked as he took the wheel fifteen minutes later. "Now for a night of fun and frolic."

But, as he glanced at Doris, she averted her face indifferently.

"I'm sorry I kept you waiting so long," Tom apologized, "but I had a detailed report to make."

"I'm sure it must have been very important," said Doris coolly.

Tom was puzzled.

"You know I had to get that story into the office before nine o'clock."

An Argument

"And you were to meet me at eight!" Doris flared indignantly. "Not eight-thirty! Really, Tom, I'm not such a fool as you seem to think."

"I'm a fool!" he repeated in bewilderment. "Of course not! Say, what is this?"

"Now, please take me home," said Doris firmly. "I don't feel in the least like a night of fun and frolic."

The sarcasm in her voice was withering. Tom could scarcely believe his ears. For a week he had been looking forward to this evening with Doris. It was about time he thought, that they became definitely engaged. Having been put on a special assignment during the past month, he had been unable to see her as often as formerly, with the result that he had suffered agonies of fear that he would lose her. Evidently he had.

"I'm very tired. Please take me home!" Doris asked again, and he noticed that she looked suddenly quite peaked. Her cheeks seemed to have lost their fullness and her eyes glistened strangely. There was no opposing this.

After leaving her at her door, without being able to win any further explanation, Tom drove slowly back to his garage. Then he walked over toward Broadway. It was too late to go to a show even had he felt in the mood for one. Finally he wandered into a News Reel Theatre.

"Just a news hound!" he thought in self reproach, and the idea dawned upon him that perhaps Doris was bored with him on that account. After all, it would have been better if he had phoned his study to the office before calling for her, even though he kept her waiting an extra half hour!

Sure that he had struck a clue to her lightning displeasure, he was impatient all the next day to finish his work before seven o'clock. His assignment had taken him over to Jersey, but by seven-thirty he was driving as fast as the law allowed back to Manhattan. And, promptly at eight, he parked his car in front of Doris' house.

"Silent!" she cried as she opened the door, and her eyes were wide with horror.

"What's the matter?" he asked tearfully.

More Hosiery

"Are you interested, or just trying to humiliate me?" she demanded haughtily.

Utterly bewildered, he followed her gaze to his vest pocket, from which was trailing a long, silk stocking. His coat pockets, too, were bulging with ladies' hosiery.

Embarrassed and confused, Tom tried to hide them from view. Suddenly Doris burst out laughing.

"Tommy, Tommy!" she cried, taking him by the ear. "Come in and explain yourself. Have you become a thief, or are you simply providing your private little scraglio with a new supply of silk stockings?"

"That's right. I haven't told you!" said Tom awkwardly. "I've been covering a Government investigation of hosiery mills this week. The working conditions, you know, and the quality of the hosiery."

"Sail" she laughed, much relieved and a little ashamed of her suspicions.

"Gee, Doris," Tom faltered, "I'm not much fun, I guess. My work always sticking out at me, and I tried so hard to get here by eight o'clock."

"You look hungry," said Doris. "I suppose you didn't even have time for supper?"

"Well, honestly now, I haven't had a bite since noon."

"Neither have I!" said Doris. "I've been so upset over the way I treated you last night that I haven't eaten a thing all day!"

Then let's go!" Tom cried joyously.

New Ethiopian Note Suspicious of Italy

Geneva, May 14—(AP)—A new Ethiopian note to the League of Nations, made public today, declared Italian concentration of troops and war materials in East Africa "leaves no doubt as to the hostile intentions of Italy."

The African Empire's note labelled "absolutely false" what it termed an Italian report general mobilization had been ordered in Ethiopia, is, saying the Ethiopian government has not ordered any measure of mobilization."

Practised Healing Without Registration

Windsor, Ont., May 13 (CP) John Ch'en was fined $5 and costs for a total of $17.50 when pleading guilty in Magistrate's Court today to practising as a drugless healer without being registered. It was claimed Fox was guilty of a technical violation of the Drugless Practitioners Act by displaying a sign saying "foot manipulation."

"He says he will take down the sign and not manipulate feet in future except for his own loomo bunion," defense counsel Gordon L. Fraser informed the Magistrate.

26 STITCHES PUT IN BLAST WOUNDS

76 Year Old James Lougheed Has Narrow Escape

Comber, Ont., May 15 (CP)— Silliked and shaken, James Lougheed, 76-year-old Merrea township resident, had a narrow escape at his home after narrowly escaping death when 12 sticks of dynamite were accidentally discharged beside him. It took 26 stitches to close his wounds.

The aged man was blasting stumps on the farm of J. S. Ainslie and brought his residence when the explosion occurred. Preparatory to blasting out a stump, he was attaching a fuse and a cap to a single stick of dynamite in the tin pail at his side when he saw the detonating cap in the basket.

It is believed he accidentally pinched a detonating cap with a pair of pliers as he was getting the fuse and this caused the premature discharge.

The flesh was torn off two fingers on his right hand, a splinter of wood pierced his face and his ears were perforated.

The tin pail, containing 13 sticks of dynamite with which had not exploded, was picked up several hundred feet away from the scene.

TAX DIVERSION SEEN AS DANGER BY TORONTO SYNOD

Anglican Report Voices Fear of Sectarian Strife

POINT IS RAISED

Opposition Expressed To What Is Called 'Radical' Principle

Toronto, May 15—(CP)—Granting requests of Catholic taxpayers that a share of Corporation School taxes be devoted to the support of Separate schools will foster "imminent danger of the creation of bitter and sectarian feelings", Toronto Synod of the Anglican Church was told today by the sub-committee of the executive appointed to consider the question./ The report says "The institution of public schools was accompanied with very great difficulties. Finally the different religious communities came generally to the support of the Public School system which does not provide specific religious education.

"The Roman Catholic Ecclesiastical authorities continued to insist upon having Separate schools supported by the school rates of those members of the Roman Catholic faith that desire to support Separate schools, under their control and management in the education of the Roman Catholic children.

Right to Direct

"As a result today our Roman Catholic citizens have the right to direct that their proportion of the pay shall go to the support of Separate schools and these schools also obtain their share of the Government support from the revenues of the province. In addition to this, incorporated companies have the right to direct that school taxes paid by such companies shall be paid to Separate schools in the proportion that the amount of shares held by Roman Catholics bears to the amount of stock issued.

"From the information your committee has it would appear that Roman Catholic authority to now demand a share of the school taxes based upon the PROPER number of Roman Catholic children and the children of the rest of the community. The result of the adoption of such a system in many communities would be that persons who are not Roman Catholics would be obliged to support schools in which they would be adopted.

"As a matters now stand, no Roman Catholic ratepayers are obliged to provide for the support of their schools, ... The apparent effect of their proposal would be to make it obligatory on all Roman Catholic ratepayers to support Separate schools whether their children were educated.

"Your committee recognize that special privileges have been granted to Roman Catholic ratepayers and authorities, but is strongly of the view that these special privileges ought not to be increased."

Jonkers Diamond Bought, Stone Brings Over $700,000

NEW YORK, May 15.—(AP)— The Jonkers New York diamond merchant, today announced the purchase in London of the Jonkers diamond, largest uncut diamond in the world, for a sum "in excess of $700,000."

Income of Royal Family Nearly $3,000,000 a Year

Britain's royal family, more than ever in the spotlight at the moment with the silver Jubilee of King George's coronation, is a costly luxury as the layout above portrays. In addition to these annual sums, totalling $2,835,000, which are paid out of the British treasury every year, the Prince of Wales has his own revenue which amounts to $300,000, and the king collects some $300,000 yearly in revenues from the Duchy of Lancaster. British people, however, believe the royal family worth that—as being the unifying force that binds the empire. In Queen Victoria's day, however, parliament often balked at new grants or revenues to the royal family.

SECRETARY BLAMED FOR HIS INFERENCE TO BLOOD SPORTS

London, May 15—(CP Cable)—Asserting in immemorial rights the House of Commons today found the Secretary of the League for Prevention of Cruel Sports guilty of a breach of privilege.

This alleged breach consisted of a letter from the League circulated among members of Parliament objecting to "blood sports", such as hunting.

The ruling was in the tail of the letter which read "if we do not hear from you we shall feel justified in telling your constituents that they have no objection to these cruel sports".

No further action is contemplated although technically the House can summon an offender to the bar and punish him by way of censure in its own commitment.

Thrilling Duel with Death Fought High in Heavens By Sir Kingsford-Smith

Caught Over Stormy Tasman Sea With a Dead Motor

LOSES PROPELLOR

Navigator Makes Adjustments While in Flight

Sydney, Australia, May 15 (CP Cable via Reuters)—Air Commodore Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith won a thrilling duel with death today in his airplane, the Southern Cross, over the stormy Tasman Sea.

The dauntless 36-year-old Australian aviator, who has flown the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans and twice held the record for the England-Australia flight faced disaster when he unexpectedly shot 1,300 mile hop from Sydney to Wellington, N.Z.

A series of terse wireless messages, sputtering out of the air, told how he struggled to keep the big plane safe during the last 1,000 miles of the starboard propellor.

Capt. F. C. Taylor, navigator aboard the Southern Cross, played a hero's role in the thrilling air duel. As the Southern Cross limped back towards Sydney with only two of her three motors functioning, the port motor began to falter. Taylor crept out along the wing and made emergency adjustments.

J. Stannard, wireless operator, stayed to maintain contact across the seas of the grim fight to keep the airplane above the water.

Sir Charles took off at 12.30 a.m. carrying a heavy load of mail and freight in a special cabin built for it. He had 34,000 letters and 14,000 pounds of freight.

Dense Cargo

At 8.51 a.m. local time (5.51 p.m. Tuesday E.S.T.) he reported loss of the propeller and said one of the engines was spluttering.

Another message followed, saying: "I am dumping my cargo and able to keep level. Trying to keep motors full out." It indicated he would try to make the Australian coast. The Southern Cross then was 500 miles from land.

Later came word from 200 miles at sea he was flying back towards Sydney with two motors working. Apparently he had managed to avoid dumping the cargo.

"We are making for Sydney. Still flying," was the next word from the Southern Cross.

Centre Motor Stops

But anxiety grew again with a message at 10.02 p.m. saying, "Wind rising. Many gusts. Centre motor stops. Can report: "Sea getting worse. Knocking noise in central motor."

At 2.06 p.m. disaster seemed inevitable. Apparently the Southern Cross was at the mercy of storms. "Afraid I'm in sea, old man," Sir Charles messaged. "Centre motor gone now."

Hope waxed again within a few minutes, when the Southern Cross sent word "Still flying" and asked for bearings. At 2.30 p.m. the Southern Cross was reported only 80 miles from Sydney.

One hour and 10 minutes later the dramatic flight had ended with a safe landing at Ascot, near Sydney.

Rescue plans had been put in motion officially when the first SOS was received. The cruiser Canberra steamed out from a quick dash to sea. The pilot steamer Captain Cook put out to meet the plane, and the airplane Pelican at Mascot. The owned by the late Charles T. P. Ulm —took off with Ulm's sister to see the crew of the Southern Cross, should they be forced down.

"It's all right—they can't kill me," Sir Charles shouted joyfully to his wife as he stepped from the airplane at Ascot Aerodrome this afternoon.

"Any one but Kingsford-Smith would have crashed," said Capt. F. C. Taylor, Sir Charles Taylor and Charles Ulm, navigator, who looked most tired, plainly showing the strain of the ordeal they had undergone.

When the propeller smashed to bits their trouble, Taylor said, the whole plane shook furiously. Kingsford-Smith immediately cut his switch and stalled the plane to prevent the engines shaking out.

All the cargo except some of the letters was dumped, and the rest was thrown overboard. The struggle to keep the plane in the air lasted from 8.51 a.m. local time until 4.10 p.m. when he landed .to be greeted by a large crowd.

MUSSOLINI WARNS AGAINST MEDDLING

Italy Will Brook No Interference in Ethiopian Situation

(By Stewart French)

Rome, May 15 (AP)—Italy faced with confidence today a world which weighed Premier Mussolini's declaration he would brook no interference in the Ethiopian situation.

The 800,000 modernly equipped men he has called to arms can assure Italy's security not only in the colonies but in Europe as well, Il Duce announced in a surprise speech before the Senate yesterday.

Every war industry in Italy, he said, has been working full time for months. There has been "a gathering of forces on land and sea and in the sky," he informed the enthusiastically applauding Senators.

Mussolini's address, always vigorous and at times ironic, was both a warning against interference in Italy's program in East Africa and a defiance of implied criticism of his policy.

"Let no one take upon himself the intolerable task judging of crusaexamining us as to the character and volume of our precautionary measures," he said. "No one except Italy can be the judge in such a moral decision as this."

Mussolini indicated leading Senators had taken no definite step in connection with the East African situation but it was understood British officials here and in London have carried on informal conversations with Italian representatives.

LIVELY DEMAND FOR BOND ISSUE

Ottawa, May 15—(CP)—A lively demand for the new $60,000,000 Dominion Government Bond issue was reported to the Department of Finance soon after the books were opened today. It is the largest loan to be handled by the Bank of Canada since the Dominion loan last March.

The loan is in two series, eight and 20 years, the former bearing interest coupons at 2 1-2 percent and the latter at 3 per cent. The price is 99.50 and 98.50 respectively.

When Belleville branch banks closed for the half holiday at noon today there had not been many demand for the $60,000,000 Dominion Government bond issue.

At the branch here the reporter was informed "There has been some demand since the morning".

"There is not a heavy demand to subscribe" was the statement at another branch.

In the other two banks no applications had been made for portions of the loan. The application forms had not yet arrived.

TOURIST CAMP TO SOON OPEN

With the spring overhaul of the grounds and buildings now completed arrangements were being made this week to officially open the city tourist camp for tourists now growing daily in numbers. Tables and benches are expected to be placed today or tomorrow, after which gas and water services will be turned on for the comfort of those who wish to take advantage of the facilities of the camp.

21st BATTALION CLUBS TO MEET

Members of the Belleville and Kingston 21st Battalion Club will unite in this city tomorrow evening at Memorial Hall when the Kingston Club will attend the regular monthly meeting of the local organization. Among those present will be Lt.-Col. H. R. Ferme, former O. C. of the unit and Major Kidd, better known as Andrew Kidd, beloved Padre of the 21st.

Water Consumption Is Not Increased

Although the open season for lawn services in the city was officially declared on May 15th, up to present time, due to the cool weather, no appreciable extra consumption of water is reported at the city plant. Lawn sprinklers have yet to make their appearances, and only the occasional use of a hose on outside taps is noted.

NEW CURE FOR MOSQUITO BITES

Now that the first crop of mosquitoes have arrived, a local angler experimenting with different citronella fly-chasing preparations to make his fishing trips more enjoyable has found a remedy and passes it on to fellow fishermen and travellers. "Just plain alum. Rub it on your hands and face and when the mosquito comes along and tries to bite you it puckers his bill so much he can't sting. He gets so disgusted he tells all the rest, and then they all quit."

OFFICIALS TO MAKE DRIVE FOR TAXES

Thus far this year 41 dogs have found their way into the custody of Thos. Thorne, local custodian of the city dog pound, the only night of this number have escaped the vehicle taking them to Kingston for having been destroyed. At the present time only slightly over fifty per cent of the local canine owners have purchased their 1935 dog tags. It being pointed out by the authorities that $10 dog taxes were paid in 1934, while to date this year only 41 have procured the little brass tag, that is issued by the city to identify all canines, whose owners have paid their 1935 dog tax. Unless there is a sudden influx of dog taxes at the police station charges of delinquency will doubtlessly follow. It was intimated by city officials today.

JAMES A. ROY SALE IS WELL ATTENDED

One of the largest auction sales in recent memory within this city was attended by scores when the effects of the late James Roy were offered for sale at his late residence, 245 Victoria Avenue, today. Rare pieces of bric a brac, ancient and modern furniture, art treasures and the ornate furnishings of one of the best equipped homes in the city went under the auctioneer's hammer during the day. Good prices were realized for the majority of the effects. The sale was conducted by Auctioneer Geo. O. Tice.

FIRST NAME ON CHAIN IS SISTER

Karl Kessler, 44 Frank Street of this city, has opened one of the latest chain "prosperity" letters that arrived.

"Make five copies of this letter, omitting the top name, and adding your own to the bottom, and send them to five friends. Send a dime to the five names and address.

The "first name" was that of his married sister in Batavia, New York, whom he had not seen in some time.

JUBILEE STAMPS EAGERLY SOUGHT

More eagerly sought than gold pieces, the special Jubilee Stamps, of the 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 10 and 13 cent issue struck in honor of the Silver Jubilee of King George and Queen Mary have been snapped up at the local post offices during the past week or so by eager philatelists almost as fast as they could be handed out. Special buyers from outside points have even made application for the stamps which were reported selling faster than those of the ordinary issue. It is expected that many of the stamps will be sent to far overseas points in the special requests of collectors abroad.

TULIP BEDS NOW IN FULL BLOOM

Flanking beds of color, a riotous blending of reds and blues, pinks and yellows and other color combinations which defy written description. Annually the tulip beds of Dr. Connor, Pinnacle Street delight the eye of local citizens as well as many tourists from out of the city who stop to admire the perfect blooms. This year, even though the bulbs have bloomed slightly later than other years, their color has more than made up for the lateness.

FUROR FOR CHAIN LETTERS LESSENS

Mail sacks on the shoulders of city postmen are becoming much less heavy; stamps are being sold from the wicket of the local post office in slightly fewer numbers; the volume of mail handed at the office appears slightly less—but the unfailingable chain letter is still making the rounds it is unofficially reported, but some of the terror of the initial stages, when the "prosperity" bubbles enjoyed their first popularity, has been lost. A few citizens of the city have reported receiving from 15 to 20 of the original chain letters, but the dollars have been few and far between and only one or two have reported themselves actually ahead of the game.

Tea and cake will be served this afternoon (Wednesday) week at Bowra Electric and Hardware.

GIRL IN BOAT GOES OVER DAM

Phyllis Mills of Shannonville Makes Light of Experience

Miss Phyllis Mills was back at work in her father's store at Shannonville today, after a ducking, and for a few brukes, apparently none too severe the previous evening, her experience of being swept over a 12-foot dam in the flooded Salmon River near her home in a motor boat became unmanageable in the swift current, and finally rolled into the rapids.

Out for a quiet fish in the mill pond above the dam alone in her boat, Miss Mills was trolling unconcernedly from the stern of the craft which was drawing her boat down the swollen river. When realization of her plight did come the current had gained so much headway that her attempts at the oars were useless. Afraid to jump, Miss Mills stuck with the boat and was swept over the dam.

Lost in the cascading falls below the dam for a brief moment or so, the boat, still bearing its occupant finally emerged from the rapids down river where willing hands of friends rushed forth to help her land and bring her to shore. Shocked and bruised by the experience the was assisted to her home where today she laughs at the incident.

"I have been swimming as early as April, but that was one bath I didn't expect", she said today in answer to friendly queries.

After the business session, the evening was devoted to cards. The prize for bridge was won by Miss Warham, and for euchre, by Mrs. Mason. Dainty refreshments were served by Coleman Ward members with Mrs. Byrnes as convener, assisted by Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Hoist and Mrs. Adams.

12th Anniversary of Kiwanis In Belleville is Celebrated

Kingston, Peterboro and Picton Clubs Join in Festivities

Stunts of all kinds, entertainment of a high order, a stirring address by the District Governor, F. G. McAlister of London and a large out-pouring of members from Belleville, Kingston, Peterboro and Picton Kiwanis Clubs made the 12th anniversary observance of the founding of the Belleville Kiwanis Club at the Bay of Quinte Country Club last night one of the outstanding events in the life of the club. It was a night of rare enjoyment and the members from the several places were loath to leave for their homes, when the strains of O Canada brought the evening to a close. Thirty-five members from the Kingston Club, the parent club of Belleville, twenty from Peterboro and ten from Picton besides a full attendance of the local club made one of the largest Kiwanis gatherings to be held in this city in some time. Besides the District Governor as an honored guest, W. J. Mills, District Governor, Lorne Askley, president of the Kingston Club, Vans Lazier, Belleville, Peterboro Club, Phill Browne, president of the Picton club were also seated at the head table along with their respective secretaries.

It would be impossible to minutely describe each detail of the splendid evening but a few of the highlights will not come amiss. The reception committee composed of Eddie Shapiro, Jack McKenzie and others welcomed the guests at the club house and an hour of social intercourse and renewing old acquaintances was in order. The call to dinner served in ample style by the steward of the club, William Little, was answered with alacrity and justice done to the good things provided. Entertainment during the meal was provided by Harold Howard, James Bankier and Fred McKellar of Kingston. A number, not scheduled on the program, which was the community singing in real style. Kingston Club provided a real treat by singing their club song, while Picton and Peterboro were not outdone. The guests at the head table were introduced by Dewart H. Griffin, the efficient secretary of the Belleville Club, while W. Y. Mills, Past District Governor proposed the toast to the Belleville Club praising them for the work done in the past and the prospects for development in the future. "Kingston Club" has reason to be sorry for sponsoring the Belleville Club" said Mr. Mills. The speaker also paid tribute to the older members of the club stating that through their efforts and the ideals of Kiwanis had seen the club through its hardest years.

The stunts were well timed and enjoyable, the speaker of the evening was introduced by F. C. MacLaurin, Past President of the Belleville Club, who also responded to the toast proposed by Mills. Mills' address was appreciated and expressed in an able manner by Kiwanian Owen Hertzy.

Governor Welcomed

The District Governor received a rousing welcome and after thanking his audience for the reception turned to his subject "Dedadication of Kiwanians to the aims and ideals of the organization." He welcomed the new members to the various clubs stating they were bringing new blood, new viewpoints into the society but they must be properly educated and given an opportunity to serve in various capacities. Every new member and every old member must be analyzed," said the speaker and "then given the work for the best suits his temperament for in that work will he give his best services to Kiwanis. Mr. A. McAlister praised the work being done for the underprivileged by the Kiwanis Clubs stating that Prescott Bruce Club, although suffering greatly from the depression had had 78 operations, minor and major performed during the last year. He also praised the good done for the boys and girls and stated Kiwanis was not a one man organization.

Mr McAlister believed, that Kiwanians should develop an aggressive, serviceable citizenship and take their place in moulding the thought of the country. He did not think that politics should be entirely taboo but that vital questions of policy could be discussed from a none political aspect and that open forums should be held for discussion in an impartial atmosphere. The District Governor made a stirring appeal for International Peace in all its phases and thought, that Kiwanians would forget their narrow interests and build friendships in communities, provinces, and nations, that would be enduring because in "forming friendships" said the speaker, "you are making investments, that will always pay dividends." He praised the performance of Vocational Guidance and more work among the boys and girls especially helping those with leisure hours. The evening was one long to be remembered by those privileged to attend.

Two Boys in Punt Must Make Call

Tales have been written about "Three men on a horse", "Two girls in a truck", but when it comes to, "Two boys in a punt", well that's a different tale, especially when the boys are in some one else's punt. At any rate that's what caused the local police department considerable anxiety yesterday. A wet hull resident complained to the authorities the loss of his son's punt, which had been previously secured at a dock in the vicinity of Allen's old mill dock, later Dorothy Lazard located the craft abandoned some distance from the original mooring point and duly ascertained that two local youths had taken leave of absence from school and enjoyed an afternoon's fun and frivolity in the craft, aimlessly enjoying the spring-like breezes as they floated around the mouth of the Moira River. The boat was returned and the two lads instructed to report to the Chief Constable after school today. Thus ended a perfectly good replica of Tom Sawyer's adventures on the waters of "Old Man River".

RADIO POLICY CHANGES

Columbia Broadcasting System has announced changes which will limit the amount of advertising on radio programs henceforth with a new policy in regard to the programs for children.

It seems strange that the sponsors of programs have not all learned long before this that they must not give the public too much publicity. Even with the best programs a large dose of publicity irritates. With a minimum of publicity, just enough to give the name of the sponsor, the radio programs will give enhanced pleasure.

The Company will permit no broadcasting for a product which requires graphic and repellant description of internal bodily ills functions or of matters which are not considered acceptable in social circles. Naturally there are some subjects the public does not want to hear about over the radio any more than it cares to discuss them in the homes. These restrictions do not prevent health talks or information of that character.

Parents will be more interested in the change in the programs for children in which crime will not be exalted, disrespect for parents will not be allowed, and in which cruelty, greed, and selfishness must not be presented. In fact only the worthwhile motives are to be allowed to be brought before the young. True life values will be presented. No one could ask more than this.

Some programs have had the effect of rousing intense nervous strain in young hearers. Melodramatic appeal to mere sensationalism will not be allowed by the company. Parents of young children will thank Columbia for that.

NEW YORK PREACHERS' VIEWS

Evil was portrayed as evil in the world by Rev. Frederick S. Fleming, rector of Trinity, Protestant Episcopal Church, New York City, preaching at Columbia University. He saw the condition of the world as evil and declared that too many of the world is a pretty good place after all were deceiving themselves. He held that Christ's coming into the world was proof that the world could not save itself. "The uniqueness, the divinity of the Christian religion is in its belief that the solution of the world's problems must come from without, not from within. Too many Christians lose sight of the fact that there are not many problems and questions facing the world, but only one, that of evil." "Christianity is the only philosophy or religion which declares that there is hope for every man who desires it through the Cross and Resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is the only one that declares that no man is so low that he cannot be raised to share the life of Christ and that there is no man so noble that he does not need God's help and forgiveness."

He cited three popular misconceptions of the world's philosophies which he said will not stand the light of Christianity that evil is a figment of the imagination or a fascinating study; that progress is inevitable; that of the efficacy of ethical or cultural standards to save the world. "Men must recognize evil for all it is worth. The world is in the midst of evil and we must recognize it for what it is—love turned the wrong way. Progress is not inevitable. Apart from God men grow worse, not better, and there is an abundance of evidence showing the failure of ethical or cultural beliefs and education to save the world."

The present trend of too much freedom for children is resulting in a one-sided development which emphasizes worldly success rather than moral and spiritual attainment, said the Rev. Dr. A. H. Evans at West Park Presbyterian Church. He urged mothers to impress indirectly on the plastic minds of their children the value of old-fashioned virtues and to set an example for them. "Mothers in their unselfish love possess the finest and best directive qualities needed by human nature... There is a trend to let the child go freely." Dr. Evans advised parents to seek obedience from children through love.

"Women who formerly disdained the home in the belief that they were destined for great business or professional success, now now discovered the joys of parenthood and have come to regard it as a task absorbing their energies and developing their best nature," commented Rabbi Louis I. Newman.

Fathers should take some of the burden of rearing children from mothers, Supreme Court Justice W. P. Bleakley told the Knights of Columbus. "You men do not bear your full share of your burden in private life." He declared that many youths fell from grace because their fathers paid little attention to them between the "important" ages of 14 and 18 years. The justice said that when children get into trouble the mothers always come to court to be with their children because "their hearts are working and not their minds" while the usual reaction of the fathers is offense at the disgrace to the family name and very often they are not in court.

If any house has but one room
Wherein I may not go,
If any town has just one street
Whose stones I cannot know,
I am a stranger there, who dwells
Distracted, throat aside;
So in that house or in that town
I grieve for faith denied.

If any life keeps hidden cares
Or unshared joys from me,
It is a house with secret rooms
Wherein I may not see;
Though true that life was to my own
As to the fruit the core,
It is at last as far away
As ocean's shore from shore.

WHEN MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK

was fifteen the Vienna opera director laughed at her efforts, advising her to become a dressmaker. Instead of a singer. Paderewski's teacher at the Warsaw Conservatory often advised him to give up the piano and take up some other instrument, the trombone, for example. so that one day, perhaps Paddy might land a job in an orchestra. Mischa Elman was about six a Russian Countess wanted to purchase him for adoption. Conductor Jose Iturbi brings an apple and a collar to the end of his concerts. During intermission he devours the fruit and changes his collar. Patti, the prima donna, used to stuff her ears when she went outside in cold weather—to keep from getting a sore throat. So says Walter Winchell in the New York Mirror. Walter is also authority for the statement that there are so few double bassoon players that one travelled from New York to a Pitsburg concert to play ONE note. Don't believe there aint no skin genmille—someone's been spoofing you, Walter.

HERE'S SOME MORE QUEER QUIRKS

on music and musicians: Wagner, years after he had written "Tannhauser", "Lohengrin", "Tristan and Isolde" and "The Valkyrie"—was starving! (Yes, We Have No Bananas!" earned nearly $150,000).

One winter the Great Mozart was found at home dancing around the room. He explained that he couldn't afford a fire. ("I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles" earned $78,000 on sheet music sales alone!).

Franz Schubert's "Lark, Hark, the Lark!" one of his greatest songs, was written on the rear of a menu card, and given to the proprietor in payment for his lunch. At his death Schubert's assets totalled $12. ("Sonny Boy" which was written to end all mammy songs, earned $150,000).

BANK ROBBERS have always been scarce in Canada, and it was thought that since the days of Jimmy Hope and his notorious feat of cracking a New York City bank for more than a million dollars that the species was dying out, but a despatch from Washington gives the startling information that Uncle Sam is starting a drive against 5,000 known bank robbers —5,000 KNOWN mind you, and probably many more unknown—5,000 mugged in the rogue's gallery, card indexed and finger-printed. Co-operation of 6,442 banks with deposits of thirty-two billion dollars has been requested, and every bank robbery or attempted bank robbery is to be communicated at once to Federal headquarters. The banks robbed are instructed not to touch anything but to leave everything just as the robbers left it pending the arrival of Federal experts who will take up the chase after examining the premises. In the past year since bank robbery was made a Federal offence there have been 116 bank robberies in the United States, with losses of over half a million dollars. Fifty convictions have resulted from the investigation of these robberies, carrying two life terms, a total of 1,155 years in other sentences, 120 years suspended sentences, 38 years probation and $32,206 in fines. A round-up of jewel thieves is next on the list.

The Fifteenth Regiment attended service at St. Thomas' Church yesterday morning. The church was a comfortable one, the ranks being well filled. Both bands were in the gallery and the Boys' Brigade of St. Thomas' Church was also in line, looking smart in their new uniforms. When the service commenced the church was well filled. The lessons were read by the O.C. of the Regiment, Lt.-Col. Hallwell. The Rev. Canon Evan Hensley, the chaplain of the Regiment and the Rector of the parish, delivered the sermon, taking his text from Ephesians 6th chapter and part of 11th to the 17th verse inclusive. Previous to the last hymn which was sung the National Anthem was sung. The singing of the choir was excellent, as were also the selections played by the organist, Mr. Wilkinson.

In a game of baseball played on the hospital lot, between a picked team and a team representing Marsh and Hendhorn, the latter team won, the score being 9 to 7. A large number of spectators was present, and enjoyed the sport. The following composed the teams: Picked Team—Pepper, Clements, T. Connell, Reeve, C. Cornell, Draycott, Page, Young and Tulk. Marsh and Hendhorn —W. Bawden, O. Bawden, Fraser, Hunter, Quincy, French, Turner, Connell and Hendhorn. Umpire—"Doc" Truesch.

FENIAN RAIDS' VETERAN MARKS 91STH BIRTHDAY

Mitchell Revoy of Frankford Receives Congratulations

Frankford—Mitchell Revoy, Fenian Raid veteran of Frankford, celebrated his 91st birthday on Thursday, May 2nd.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Revoy lived in the Township of Rawdon near the village of Stirling.

At the age of fifteen he began to work out, his first job being in the lumber camp at Deer River, Hastings County operated by Sanford Baker, lumberman of Belleville.

Two years later he was engaged in farm work, near Redneresville, and in 1863 while there, joined the 15th., Canadian Militia Battalion. When the Fenian Raid broke out in '66 Mr. Revoy was to be found in the ranks of No. 9 Company, the Company Commander being Capt. Wm. Anderson of Roblin's Mills.

On Sunday, June 5th., that memorable year in Canadian History the 16th Battalion under the command of Col. Ross of Picton, embarked from Redneresville on the S.S. St. Helen bound for Kingston, taking up quarters at Fort Henry Camp. During the Raid Mr. Revoy was stationed along with his company at Kingston.

In 1870, he married Almeda Tompkins of Rawdon, the ceremony taking place at the home of his brother-in-law at Harold, the officiating clergyman being the Rev. Robt. Carr, Anglican minister of Stirling. Of this union there were 8 children, all living today with the exception of one. There are two daughters living at Timmins, and the rest of the family live at Frankford, Campbellford, Marmora, Peterboro and Vancouver. Mrs. Revoy passed away in 1927 and is buried in Frankford Cemetery.

Mr. Revoy spent 6 years in Oakland and Tuscola Counties, Michigan, where he was engaged in lumbering and farming. He is still in the best of health, eats three good square meals a day and has cured Baker, lumberman of Belleville.

He retires around nine o'clock and is an early riser going up before six.

In politics he is a Conservative. He is also very fond of music, and after the evening meal he often sits down the old violin and whiles away the hours playing some of the old time tunes of which he has quite a repertoire.

IMPERIAL

THE SIGN OF A FAIR DEAL

THE Three-Star Imperial oval sign marks a place where you can buy with confidence; where you can be sure of good value and full measure.

It is the symbol of an organization that has steadily improved the quality and consistently reduced the price of petroleum and petroleum products — for gasoline prices today are lower than ever before.

The Three-Star Imperial oval sign stands for a fair deal to all: to you, the consumer, and to the labor engaged in making and marketing Imperial products. The thousands of Imperial Oil workers are well treated. Five thousand of them are part owners of the Company. They are paid good wages. They have sickness and death benefits and old age pensions which mean that in affliction or old age they and their families do not become dependent on funds which must be raised by taxation.

Because they are fairly treated, Imperial Oil employees work loyally, enthusiastically and enterprisingly. That is why, through the years, it has been possible steadily to improve the quality and consistently to lower the price of Imperial gasoline and oils.

DOCTOR SAID SHE NEEDED "BULK" FOR HER CONSTIPATION"

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Brings Relief to Mrs. Maneely

Read the following unsolicited letter:

"Up to five years ago, I knew no end of suffering caused by constipation." I used all kinds of laxatives but only found relief till I got used to them. My physician told me to get some Kellogg's ALL-BRAN, and instructed me how to use it.

"I did just as I was told by my doctor, and today I send my Maker praise for what your ALL-BRAN has done for me."—Mrs. Jas. Maneely, Jr. Address upon request.

"Due to insufficient "bulk" in meals.

ALL-BRAN provides gentle "bulk" to help overcome common constipation. It is also a good source of vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" of ALL-BRAN is often more effective than the "bulk" in fruits and vegetables, as it does not break down within the body. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. If not corrected this way, see your doctor.

Isn't this food much pleasanter and safer than risking patent medicines? Get the red-and-green package at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

BURGLARY RING IS ROUNDED UP

Film Stars Lose Over Half Million By Systematic Robberies

Los Angeles, May 15.— (UP)— A nation-wide "burglary ring" which preyed on Hollywood film notables and distributed stolen goods through "fences" in New York, Chicago and Mexico, was disclosed Tuesday by police after the arrest of a woman and four men.

More than $500,000 worth of jewelry, furs and other valuable loot was taken from homes of prominent film stars and executives by members of a "burglary school" who studied pictures of film stars as a background for systematic burglaries, police said.

Names, addresses and unlisted telephone numbers of many well-known members of the film colony were found in a little black book seized by arresting officers, police said. The names included Jean Harlow, Peter Arno, Marion Davies, John Barrymore, Eddie Cantor and District Attorney Buron Fitts.

Police arrested Mrs. Frances Krug, 34, alias known as Margaret Manning, reported to be manager of a fashionable film colony apartment house, where many victims of the burglary ring lived.

They also held four men who gave their names as Stefan Gonachkan, 46; Aran Fery 28; John Reukin, 34, and Joe V. Mendina, 34. They said the leader of the group had not been arrested.

Among victims supposedly disclosed by the arrests was Mrs. Rhobe Mayer, sister-in-law of Louis B. Mayer, chief executive of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. Furs, jewelry and especially perfumery were looted from her home April 24 by men carrying suitcases.

All five arrested persons were held incommunicado while an effort was being made to round up other persons suspected of being connected with the ring.

Detective Chief Joseph Taylor said police had been on the trail of the bandit ring for weeks, and had traced operations through the east and to Mexico.

The method apparently followed was for a member of the gang to obtain auto license numbers of women seen wearing expensive furs and jewelry. Later telephone numbers were obtained. Members of the gang rang the telephone periodically until through lack of an answer it was believed the householders were absent, when the burglary could be carried out.

60 ROAD CAMPS IN ONTARIO CLOSED

15,000 Men Thrown Out of Employment By Action

TORONTO, May 15.—(CP)—Approximately 15,000 men were added to the unemployed today as 60 government road construction camps were closed down in northern and northeastern Ontario.

Orders were issued yesterday by Hon. Peter Heenan, Ontario, minister of Lands, and Forests, closing the camps.

The main reason for the action, Mr. Heenan said in announcing the shutdown, was the result of the declaration of policy by the Federal Government that relief should be bearing a part of the cost of the transients in the camps, maintained.

About twenty camps will remain open in places along the trans-Canada highway where relief camps are nearly completed.

The camps continue to finance these projects ourselves," declared Mr. Heenan, "and I hope the Federal Government would accept its responsibility to the unemployed and help finance these organizations and give us definite assurance that the completion of the trans-Canada highway cost they would bear."

Last year the provinces spent $23,000,000 on relief camp work," he recalled very little return," said Mr. Heenan.

TANGLED LIVES

By ANN FORESTER

"Why do you look for work?" Therrold asked. Joyce felt his eyes brush her face before he turned them again to the street ahead. "Pardon, doesn't bother to work."

"Nadine has an income of her own!" Joyce answered quickly. Her voice had a queer defiant ring as though to drown the frightened pounding of her heart. She went on desperately. "I feel that I can't in all decency go on living with Nadine. She's been so good to me . . . but I must find work!"

Joyce felt the sharp edge on her voice and stopped abruptly. Silence fell between them broken only by the hum of tires on concrete.

Like a strange dream—to be spinning through the thick dusk like this, vague fear in her heart. If only they would look at each other, the others. Anything to remove the personal ring from the conversation.

They were driving through the suburbs of the city, small cottage houses standing in flower gardens. Through the front windows Joyce could see softly lighted rooms . . . a fire . . . Safe homes . . . making her heart ache with longing. Fleeting were wide twilight places, fresh and fragrant in the dusk.

Through the man beside her was silent, Joyce felt that his thoughts dealt with her. She wanted desperately to break the heavy silence but she feared she could think of nothing to say.

The suburbs were left behind. They were driving through open country, the headlights cleaving a path of gold through the night. The machine might be a gleaming eyed dragon bearing them home to its cave to devour . . . She was about to tell the man in front of her—

Therrold, but on the verge of speech she checked herself. For some strange reason the idea was suddenly terrifying.

Joyce roused from her painful thoughts. Therrold was swinging the car off the highway into a branch road. A short distance up this and they turned into a small leafy garden surrounded by a dusky evergreen hedge.

They were facing a frame cottage, if there was life within, the shades must be drawn, for no gleam of light pierced the heavy old-fashioned shutters.

Joyce's eyes were wide with alarm and she gazed as the man shut off the engine.

THE SECRET HOUSE

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

"What place is this!" Alarm ringing through Joyce's voice.

Jeff Therrold had walked around to her side of the car. He had opened the door and was waiting for her to get out.

"This is I—Eagle Nook." He stopped as the door of the cottage opened and let a flood of light upon them. A woman was blocked against the background of a lighted hall

Jeff Therrold spoke: "Well, we got here, Mrs. Landini, never mind how never! Hope we didn't spoil that excellent dinner of yours."

The woman flashed a white smile at him and shook her head so vigorously that the gold frosted her ears flashed.

A wave of weak relief went over Joyce. She felt slightly impatient at herself. Oh, this was absurd! Because she was letting her nerves steal away her common sense. Just because she was tired and depressed she was imagining something sinister in something merely picturesque.

Joyce took Jeff Therrold's hand and stepped from the car.

"It's just a small bachelor country place," the man explained in a low voice as he helped her up the steps "but they put up an awfully good dinner."

"Where are the others? I don't see Len's car—"

Therrold put the question to the woman, who broke into a torrent of broken English.

The other gentleman had phoned . . . something had happened to his car . . . they were waiting for a garage to have it fixed, T'e others were not to wait for them but were to have dinner.... they would drive down and join them as soon as the car was fixed. . . .

Something parrolike about the rapidity with which she rattled it off.

"I'm not surprised. Len's car has been acting up," said Therrold. "Well, nothing to do but wait for them here."

Joyce hesitated in the doorway and her face was white and troubled in the slanting light.

"Do you think we should wait here . . . Somehow I feel that this place is—queer....."

Therrold shrugged his big shoulders. "Nothing queer about it. Just a country cottage. Landini and his wife used to run a restaurant in the city. I knew them then. Since they have retired and moved here they cook dinners now and then by appointment for a few of their old patrons."

It was very logical. Insulting—to doubt him... to hesitate about going in. . . Joyce fought down the odd reluctance and entered.

The woman led her down a long narrow hall papered in a hideous pattern to a small bedroom at the end. The place was furnished with ugly comfort. A large wooden bed with an immaculate spread. Clean crocheted doilies were pinned to each chair back—the big carpet-seated rocker sported one on each arm of the chair as well.

Joyce dropped her cape on the bed and nervously scanned her face before the bureau. The glass gave back her incongruous satin figure... . a lovely alien to these commonplace surroundings. She was pale. She touched the rouge puff to her cheeks and followed the waiting woman down the hall.

She found Therrold in a small dining room with a table set for two. He was talking to a dark giant of a man—evidently the woman's husband.

At this, something of Joyce's uneasiness mellied. Therrold's story was evidently true. The presence of the Italian couple reassured her. She forced herself into light hearted conversation as they started dinner.

The woman served—Landini was evidently the cook—and Joyce praised the dinner. She pretended to taste the sauterne which sparkled in the glass before her, and the waiting behind his black eyes.

Oh, it had been a mistake—a mistake...to come here alone with him!

He reminded her of a sleepy lion, waiting to pounce, as he watched her with half shut eyes. He ate little, beside his salad but he frequently refilled his glass from the bottle the woman brought.

Joyce drew a breath of relief when the coffee appeared, accompanied by a tiny glass of golden cordial which the man drained with one gulp. He was a man who would take life in great gulps, thought the girl nervously watching him.

After she had served the cordial the woman left the room. The girl fallen to see her half-smile as she met Therrold's eyes, or the little thrill which she gave the man.

"We've finished dinner—there's no use waiting for Nadine and Len now..."

Joyce could hear the relief in her own voice and she pushed her cup aside. "Let's go back to town and —and dance—"

"Have you enjoyed it, Joyce, being here—with me?" Therrold's eyes were roving over her face—over her bare shoulders in a sort of furtive caress. To Joyce's excited fancy it seemed that they were two black beetles crawling loathsomely upon her.

"Why —of course!" Her laugh was a little gasp. "But it's so late —you know I—I have to get up early tomorrow, I must find work—"

Therrold had risen. He was coming around the table. Joyce started to her feet, bit he clutched her by her upper arms and his thick fingers sank into her soft flesh.

"Let's make the most of this and talking plain, you and I?"

"Acting . . . why . . . why . . . I don't know what you mean."

"Oh, yes you do!" Therrold pulled Joyce up into his arms. His face crushed down on her own, filling her with panic.

"Let me go! Ah . . . let me go!" Her voice came smothered against his mouth. Then she had pulled away. She had slipped to the other side of the table, for he stood blocking the door.

The pupils of her eyes were black spread until they nearly touched the rim of the iris. Her breast rose and fell in sharp uneven breathes. One hand spasmodically crumpled the skirt of the satin dress. She was noted as though for flight—the one thing which has challenged men through the ages.

It fired the man's blood. The girl retreated before him until she was stopped by an angle of the wall.

"Don't came near me!" Joyce felt a stab of frightened anger as she heard how weak her own voice sounded. "...I don't want you, Jeff . . . But if you touch me I—I'll call Nadine! Oh!"

Therrold's lips parted in a sounding laugh. "Go ahead and call. Don't you think I manage things better than that? We're alone. Why do you suppose I brought you here, you pretty little devil?"

"Alone!"

"Of course!" The man's black eyes were watching her closely. "Why do you suppose they rent cabins like this place? They're turned it over to us. They won't be back—"

THE SHOW DOWN

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Joyce stared at Jeff Therrold the color slowly seeping from her face.

But the shock of his words brought Joyce back to her senses. Nothing was to be gained by flying into a panic. . . . She would have to outwit him.

She swallowed. "Why. . . are you doing this?"

The man's heavy face lighted with approval. "That's better. Going to be sensible, aren't you? Going to talk common sense?"

His eyes were caressing her. Joyce had seen that look in men's eyes before. In Norman's eyes. Ah, but this man was different. . . .

"Yes. I—I'll talk common sense."

"Good girl. Sit down."

Joyce slipped down upon a chair. The man looked at her and his gaze softened.

"You're a beautiful kid. If you weren't, I wouldn't have fooled along this last month. . . . don't have to . . . But there's something different about you and I was willing to humor you. But a man gets tired of stalling, Joyce. I'm talking plain."

She nodded. She had dropped her eyes so that he could not read the sick fright in them. The lashes lay dark and feathery against her cheeks. He took in the gleaming bent head, and Therrold's lower lip came out reflectively. A lovely thing . . . worth humoring. But there was a limit . . .

"Crazy about you . . . " he said between his teeth. "The first time I saw you I made up my mind—well, I saw that you were looked after, didn't I?"

Wide violet eyes flashing to his face. "You . . . ? Why, it was Nadine—"

Therrold's lips curled in derision. "Use your head, Joyce. Who do you suppose put Nadine up to it? That tramp? Why, Nadine is so flighty she wouldn't help her own grandmother out! She hates the ground you walk on. Jealous of you—and she has cause. You've got her licked and she knows it. But I have Nadine and Len Bates where I want them. I had both them here—"

He stretching out one huge hand and slowly clenched it. The watching girl shivered.

"You mean— that was only a—a stall—about finding Len and me with that woman as a model?"

"Certainly. But don't let that bother you. You don't have to work any more than Nadine does. Not so much, perhaps. I am more generous than Len Bates. And you're prettier than Nadine."

"And it was you—all the time— that time she sprained her ankle!"

Jeff Therrold laughed and the sound grated on the girl. "She's a resourceful devil. I'll have to hand that to her! I don't know how I was to get to know you—you cold, reserved little iceberg."

Therrold bent, his head so close to her own that Joyce could feel his hot breath on her cheek. "It's me you have to thank for looking after you—right from the first. Even that dress you have on now—I've wanted to see you in white satin ever since that first night on the train. You're a beauty, honey. . . ."

This dread No wonder it had fitted so perfectly! The gleaming satin suddenly burned like Hercules' poisoned shirt.

"I fell for you hard." Therrold went on. Joyce knew he was looking at her and she did not dare lift her head. "You were different from Nadine. I didn't know any other way to work it. There was no time—I was afraid you'd get away when we reached the city. So I put Nadine up to scraping acquaintance with you. She took the bait and swerved frills on it. She went to the bat for me. She'd better—I have her and Len just where I want them."

At the menace in his tone the girl shivered.

"I wanted you to get a taste of good living," Therrold went on. "I'm give you pretty swell living—better apartment than Nadine. You'll have more liberty too. I'm free and Len's afraid his wife will get on—"

Sick self-contempt rose under the girl's fear. Oh, she deserved this! She had felt there was something wrong and she should have left Nadine's apartment long ago! She gripped her hands hard. Be cautious . . . She was in a trap. A sudden wrong move might spring it.

She looked up. Forced her lips to a smile. "Well . . . so it's you who has been —so kind to me . . . . That—that sort of makes things look different, doesn't it.

Deep in his throat. Therrold laughed and drew Joyce in his arms.

No use struggling! That warning inner voice was wrong. Relax! Lay passive, while he kissed her mouth. Pull her closed eyes. . . Pretend it was only a dream . . . A slow shudder passed over her from head to foot.

Joyce withdrew gently from Therrold's embrace resisting him off with a slender arm braced against his chest. Smiled.

"You've got breath away! And look—my hair—all down! You've made me look like a fright! No—please—let me go and fix it!"

"I'll go with you."

Something wild leaping in her breast. "No!" Then, frightened at the sharpness of that she forced a sweetly pleading "I'll tell you—fix me up a little drink will you—dear. Like that one you fixed for us all before night? Please —I haven't really had a thing all evening. I don't like wine."

Joyce felt that her heart stopped beating until he nodded, satisfied. She walked to the kitchen door with him, enduring his arm about her, enduring —while he kissed her lips —her bare shoulders. Reluctantly, he let her go.

"I'll be right back. Mix that drink for me—"

Joyce forced herself to walk slowly down the hall to the bedroom . . . feeling her face cold and white. In the room, safe from his overseeing eyes, she snatched up her cape. Flung up the window. It opened with a little screech which frose her blood. She lunged for the short space to the dark garden below.

Fumbling with a gate in the hedge . . . a moment that seemed a century. Then she was running over a ploughed field—stumbling blindly out of the blackness but the sigh of the night wind. The far away bark of a dog.

On again, more slowly now. Her slippers were weighed with damp earth. Her hands were slippery with it. Satin slid down a cutaway bank, gathering more stains on the dress and cape, and felt the hard cement of the highway under her feet.

Six Teams Will Face Barrier In Senior Softball Loop and Opening Date Set for May 24

Four City and Two Outside Clubs Will Compose Loop

UMPIRES ARE NAMED

Sixty Game Schedule Accepted After Much Discussion

A sixty game schedule was adopted by the clubs composing the Belleville and District Senior Softball League at a meeting held in the Aajmaa Club rooms last night. The original six teams to be included in the loop all signified intentions of operating and include four local teams, namely, S.E.A.C., Aajmaa Club, Young Canada Club and the Alemite A.C. along with the Tweed and Redcerville entries, the two out-of-town clubs coming accepted into the loop. The old College Hill Cubs asked permission to change the name of their organization to the Young Canada Club, which was roomily granted.

It was moved and passed, that Mayor Tice and the local city council be invited to attend the opening of the local softball season on May 24th at Central Park, when the S.E.A.C. and the Young Canada Cubs open hostilities locally, while other opening games will be played at Tweed and Redcerville. A fee of $3.00 was set as the money to accompany all protests entered, with a similar fee to be assessed the defending club, the club losing the protest defaulting their deposit. The Central Park was named as official diamond of the league with the old Albert College field and the Alemite grounds being alternate grounds in case two games are being played on one date in Belleville.

The umpires named by the various teams were: Redcerville, Roy Wannamaker, Eldon Adams and Wilf Cretney; Alemite, Earl Gardiner, M. Little, Art. Calhoun, E. Darrah and Odell Allin; S.E.A.C., A. Pelotier and Joe Goyer; Aajmaa Club, A. Eshler and Don Hurst; Young Canada Club, Geo. Crapper and Cleo Colling. The Tweed team will submit their list at a later date. Each club reserved the right to add to their list of umpires if necessary. Only qualified umpires will be allowed to officiate in the league now possessed. Ken Edgecombe having full power to appoint and revise all umpires during the season.

Track and field meets are fast coming into their own in Belleville with the arrival of warmer weather. On Thursday afternoon the scholars of St. Michael's Academy will hold a track and field meet at the Exhibition Park, while the annual R.C.A.F. V.S. meet is scheduled for the 31st of the month. The usual dashes, runs and field events will constitute the programme to be competed in by the scholars from "St. Mikes" on Thursday. For the past few weeks the pupils have diligently been training for their first annual field day and keen competition is looked for in every event.

After a rather stormy meeting the local softballers eventually drafted a 60-game schedule last evening, embracing four local teams,

DAY BY DAY

All roads lead to the Belleville Arena tonight for the inter-city boxing tournament between four Ottawa athletes and four of Promoter Clem Allen's local scrappers as well as four other bouts of an equal standing. Matchmaker Allen's last minute announcement regarding the signing of Howard Williams, former welterweight champion of Canada, who meets Ted Clark of Kirkland Lake, just about tops off a perfect night's show. On paper it looks like "champion's night", as there are more titleholders on the card than are usually tossed into the ring in such a small community. Besides the four Ottawa titleholders and the local district champs who oppose them, there are Williams, Clark, "Kid" Viseur and Mark Storms, all of whom hold some crown or other. There is little more to be said about tonight's boxing card except that it is doubtlessly the most amateur boxing card to have been presented in Belleville since Jerry was a pup.

We are in receipt of 926 Industrial scores and averages in the G. Spalding Co. at Brantford. Each and every year the Spalding Company very graciously forwards us 200 of these score cards, to be distributed among the district softball and minor baseball clubs. The cards are available to all team managers for the asking. We as well as the various softball and baseball clubs throughout the community, are highly indebted to the A.G. Spalding Company for their generous gesture in supplying this community with score cards "Don't rush boys, there's plenty to go around"

According to G. E. Gibbard, local district executive member on the O B A there is to be a slight change in the qualifications of the intermediate ratings in the baseball body this year. Instead of having groups or classes listed as B1 and B2 these are to be known as "B" and "C" series, as well as the original "A" series, in which the Oldtimers are classed. To more fully explain the situation, the Oldtimers, last year's intermediate "A" titleholders, are still in "A" company, the Bay of Quinte League, Gananoque, Picton, and Belleville, are in group "B", while such leagues as the Kingston City and the Prince Edward County and the Trenton Valley, Deloro etc., will be known as class "C", thus eliminating any confusion in relationship to B1 and B2 as was the case last season. "An excellent move indeed". Incidentally we understand there may be another series added to the O. B. A. in a year or so, known as Senior "B".

A newcomer to local wrestling circles was signed by the Kiwanis wrestling promoters last night when "Bull" Steele was engaged to meet Dan Peterff in the semi-final of Friday night's grappling show at the Belleville Arena. Steele was always a favourite in a local ring, but it is understood, that Steele is a topnotcher and will provide plenty of opposition for the colorful Russian. Whether "Bull" Steele will stay relative to.. the famed wrestler.. Hay Steele or not, we cannot say, but even the name suggested keen drawing ability. Of course the feature attraction of the night is the return bout between Johnnie Gyroffy and Badman Al Dunlop with Jack Forbes as the third man in the ring.

Seven teams have definitely signified their intentions of entering the local Mercantile softball league while the eighth entry, the St. John's Men's Club, is seriously considering entering the loop out into an eight dubbed loop. The seven teams already entered are —Lobb's-Canada Packers; Canada Refrigeration; London Lunch (page George Kirk); Canadian Department Stores; American Hardware and Leo Byrrett's Recreation Alley's team. Only one change has been in the books was the barring of all Senior City players from from competition in this loop, a very commendable suggestion, as was pointed out by the sponsors of the loop, the league is being organized more for recreation among working young men and boys, where they can get out and play a little diversion as well as fun. The club meet again on Friday night to draft a schedule etc.

This evening the Kingston Ponies are playing the Smith's Falls team of the E.O.B.A. in Kingston. The Easterners trimmed the Ponies in the C.P.R. town last week, but the Dairy-contested outfit, with Bud Clancy on the hilltop, expect to reverse matters this evening. The Ponies journey to Ottawa on Thursday for a game with Crains, also of the E.O.B.A. Apparently the Ponies intend, to have an extensive pre-season training period this year.

Daily Short Story

The Lucky Box

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Some people go through life with one mysterious thing happening to them after another. These people all have experience with ghosts, spirits, queer sounds, and the rest. Most of them carry rabbits' feet for charms. They accept the supernatural as the most natural thing in the world.

On the other hand, there is another group which is just the contrary. Nothing ever happens to them that they can't solve through nature logic. They show that ghosts are shadows. Spirits frequently drag-chain. And queer sounds merely a bird, shingle flapping in the wind.

George Wright was one of the latter. He was a skeptic from Skepticville. Ghost stories rolled off his back like water from a tin roof.

That was before he went to India. And—well—now . . .

There was an in-between era in which he was a believer. And that's our story, and you're stuck with it.

Seems when he was in Calcutta he visited the native quarter of the city. There, in a shop, he came across a most ornate box, carved all of what appeared to be ivory. Dragons and serpents and elephants ran rampant over the sides, each colored with the strange coloring that the East knows so well. As a memento of India George Wright wanted that box. He asked the merchant the price, and the merchant refused to sell. George Wright wanted to know the reason, and the merchant told a story.

10,000 Years

"This box is 10,000 years old," he said. "It was once the property of Buddha, and descended through the generations to the family of Buddha. One day, however, the box was stolen from the family, and by the thief came great renown, fortune and happiness. And this happiness persisted through the years even after some one else had stolen it from the first thief. The second thief found equal renown, fortune and happiness.

"Now, after achieving all this, the second thief sold the box to a friend. The magic of the box disappeared. The friend was no better, or no worse, off than before. But a third thief stole the box, and he too achieved renown, fortune and happiness.

"So it came to be known that the box, to be of magic powers, must be stolen."

George Wright listened incredulously.

"So what?" he asked.

The storekeeper shook his head but said nothing.

Then a light dawned in George Wright's mind.

"I see," he said, and turned to look at other goods on display. He bought several bits at exorbitant prices, and on his way out of the shop, pocketed the box.

Immediately the box's powers became manifest. He had hardly stepped out of the shop when he collided with a man who began an apology, and then cried: "Why, George Wright!"

He was an old friend....an old impecunious friend of New York days. George had helped him many times and had even, five years before, "grub-staked" him on a venture that took him out of debt and out of mind.

"Been pretty prosperous lately," the friend said. "Glad to bump into you. Want to pay back."

George Wright merely gasped.

The old friend found a place against a building and wrote out a check.... for $10,000.

"This ought to cover everything," he said....

There's a three-hour intermission here.

When George got back to his hotel, and wife, he found a cablegram from his agent in New York. "Sold serial rights to your book for $25,000," it said. "Book will make you famous."

George Wright had become a believer in magic. If you had told him a ghost story then, he would have topped it with one twice as weird.

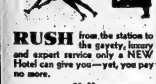
More Luck

And as his trip around the world progressed his luck went soaring along. In Greece, he found a bit of discarded statuary which he sold for $1,000 in fifteen minutes. In Venice, he bought an antique writing desk with a secret compartment which contained an early edition of Marco Polo's travels. In Paris, he sat in a restaurant without being overcharged.

Mrs. Wright became even more of a believer than George. She went out of her way to make him get out of his way to buy things. Always profit accrued.

Back in New York, they discovered George's serial had led to demands for innumerable short stories and books. George was sitting on top of the world.

Mrs. Wright guarded the box as she would have guarded her life in a pinch. However, woman-like she had to tell her friends of the magic box. At a bridge, she exhibited the box, and told of its power.



"Ten thousand years old" she said, holding the box aloft. George who had come in to take a bow as a famous author, cried out as the box slipped from her fingers. His cry disconcerted her, and the box fell to the floor and spattered out—broken in a dozen pieces.

With a sob, he knelt down and picked up the pieces...holding them together. One triangle was missing. He searched high and low for it, and finally discovered it in his trouser cuff where it had bounced. He fondled that piece and rubbed his eyes.

On the back of it, printed in blue ink, was a Blue Eagle and the words: "Made in U.S.A."

That moment made George an unbeliever again.

Little Benny's Note Book

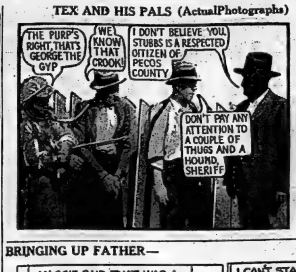
Pop was smoking and thinking and ma said, How about taking in a movie, Willyum?

I can sleep more inexpensively right here in my chair pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum why don't you wait till your chickens are hatched before you take the bull by the horn, I mean how do you know you'd go to sleep?

Well, maybe if there's a good mystery picture in town, pop said, and ma said, It's a very simple matter to look and see nothing ventured nothing lost.

And she opened the paper to the movie adds, saying, Here we are, the very first from out of the fire, Murder in a Taxi, at the Narcissus.

By gollies I bleeve I had a brilliant idea!, that sounds good pop said, and ma said, And here's the Mausoleum, Murder at the Cross Roads.



I think I prefer a taxi, it sounds more comfortable, somehow, and less drafty pop said, and ma said, I wonder what's at the New Miracle, here it is, Murder in the Kitchin, well of all things.

That sounds homey and cozy, pop said, and ma said, O here's real news, Harts Are Trumps, at the Mammoth, with Lovey Darling, Roncel Bonnet and Fredy Feerle that awful funny man, what do they have to put him in? It's the last nite for it Willyum, we must go, she said.

And how about my murder? pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum I just told you this is the last nite for Harts Are Trumps, and those murders go on forever.

But lonite has an end, and no mystery in site, pop said. Something seems to of gone wrong somewhere. Well, will you try to wake me up every time Fredy Feerle comes on? he said and ma said, O, all rite. I'll give you one poke with my elbow.

3,100-MILE FLIGHT TO CREATE RECORD

Tomlinson Expects To Make Six Laps of 621 Mile Course

New York, May 16 (AP)—D. W. (Tommy) Tomlinson, Transcontinental Western Airways pilot, took off from Floyd Bennett Field, Brooklyn, at 8.56 a.m. (E.D.T.), today on a projected 3,100-mile flight over a closed course in an attempt to establish six new speed records.

Flying the Douglas airliner with which he recently established a transcontinental transport plane record of 11 hours and 9 minutes, Tomlinson will follow a triangular course between Brooklyn, Washington and Norfolk, Va., measuring 621 miles or 1,000 kilometres.

He expects to make five laps of the course, each 621 miles, remaining in the air between 16 and 17 hours.

He was accompanied by Joseph E. Bartles, co-pilot, with him on his previous record-breaking flight.

The six speed records Tomlinson hopes to set are those for commercial planes of 1,000 kilometres with a payload of 1,000 kilograms and 5,000 kilometres with payloads of 500 and 1,000 kilograms and with no pay load. The present records are held in France and Spain.

KNOTTY ISSUES FACE BENNETT ON HIS RETURN

Canada Contemplates No Action On Nickel

PARTY LEADERSHIP

Caucus May Be Called In Mid-Week To Settle Question

Ottawa, May 16 (CP)—Prime Minister R. B. Bennett will arrive back in Ottawa from the King's jubilee celebrations in London, Saturday morning to find many problems awaiting his return to active administration duties.

Japanese objections to the currency dump charged by Canada against depreciated foreign money constituting a sizeable trade barrier, the world wheat agreement which has again been violated by the Argentine in the matter of export quotas, agitation to prohibit the use of Canadian nickel for munitions manufacture, and the complex political situation that exists in the Dominion are among the questions which await Mr. Bennett's personal attention.

Arrival on Friday.

A wireless message was received from the Duchess of York at sea yesterday from the, Prime Minister stating he had been enjoying an "excellent voyage" and he would disembark at Quebec Friday and entrain at once for Ottawa.

With respect to nickel, about which a question was raised in the House of Commons in London the government contemplates no action in the belief anything Canada could do would have no effect upon the general picture of disarmament. If it came to the point Canada could be shown its nickel exports to any particular country were going into war munitions some steps could be taken to prevent it.

One of the developments following the return of Mr. Bennett is expected to be settlement of the question of his continuing in the office of Prime Minister and Leader of the Conservative party.

Caucus On Leadership.

A government caucus will be called, probably no later than Wednesday of next week and possibly earlier, at which this question will be discussed.

So far as his office in Ottawa has been informed the Prime Minister is in good health and as well as he hoped to be when he started his journey to England. It is the general belief among his associates he will continue to lead the government party and go to the country in that capacity.

INDIGENTS IN NEED OF HOSPITAL SPACE

Toronto, May 16.—Greater facilities for the hospitalization of indigent patients must be provided because of the overcrowding of the present available accommodation, Hon. Dr. J. A. Faulkner, minister of health, said yesterday in an address given at a joint luncheon meeting of the Downtown, Riverdale and West Toronto Kiwanis Clubs.

SUSPECTED PAIR SURRENDER UNDER FUSILADE OF SHOTS

Ex-Convicts Wilfrid Lilly and Leo Dionne Taken Near Napanee

WANTED FOR HOLD-UP

Police Posse From Napanee, Kingston, Belleville in Chase

KINGSTON, Ont., May 16—(CP)—Leo Dione and Wilfred Lilley, arrested near Napanee last night, loday were charged with armed robbery of $45 and a gold watch committed by the Pelmanded until May 31. They were not asked to plead.

The two men were identified by Merle Polk, gas station operator, as the men who held him up at the point of a revolver early Wednesday and escaped with the $45 and gold watch.

Both alleged robbers belong to Cornwall. Dione was serving a seven-year term in the Kingston Penitentiary when released by the King's amnesty last week while Lilley was released from the Penitentiary several months ago after serving a term.

Napanee, May 16.—Surrendering under a fusillade of shots from Provincial police officers that climaxed an all-day search in the farming country lying to the north and east of Napanee, Wilfred Lilley, 32, and Leo Dionne, 21, both ex-convicts, were captured Wednesday night at the back of the Newburg continuation school, five miles northeast of here.

The pair had allegedly held up a service station on Highway No. 2 at the Bath Road in Kingston where they forced the attendant, Merle Polk, at the point of a gun, to hand over the contents of the till, about $40 in cash and Polk's gold watch was taken and as the pair backed away from the station they warned their victim not to move till they were on their way.

In a coupe that appeared to have had trouble on account of being spattered with mud and grass, the bandits made their way down the Highway and soon the roaring of their speeding motor died in the distance. Polk immediately phoned Kingston police and gave them a description of the men and car. Police of Napanee and Belleville were at once notified and four Kingston police under Detective Fitzgerald started in pursuit.

Meanwhile the men in waiting at the easterly entrance to the town, had their headlights on as darkness narrowly missing one of the officers. The highway at this point takes a short turn to the left and they left No. 2 at this point and proceeded down the Newburg road. Another turn a quarter of a mile farther was missed and they followed a dirt road through a field to a field. The car, considerably damaged, is reported to have been stolen from a Bath garage owner and is the property of R. Soptzinger of that place.

Kingston police and others from Belleville arrived shortly after and a posse in charge of Provincial Constable Arthur Dafoe, Traffic Officer Byles of Belleville; Detective Fitzgerald and three city police from Kingston, and Chief Constable Watts, Provincial Officer Barrett and Constable Cook and Chambers of Napanee.

Coming Events

STANLEY BALDWIN MAY BE PREMIER

Gossip Reconstruction of British Cabinet Will Take Place

LONDON, May 16.—(CP Cable)—Possibility that the mantle of Prime Minister might fall again on shoulders of Stanley Baldwin stirred interest in political circles today.

Gossip in the lobbies was to the effect a reconstruction of the Cabinet was probable. One report was that it would involve Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and Mr. Baldwin exchanging places.

Concurrently there was talk of a possible general election in the autumn.

In political quarters attention was directed to the excessive strain the Premiership had placed on Mr. MacDonald, who carries out prodigious reading with troublesome eyesight. Also it was considered normal reparations should take place during the long life of any government. The MacDonald Administration has been in office since October, 1931.

Mr. Baldwin as leader of the Conservative Party is no stranger to the Premiership. He held that office for some months in 1923 and again from 1924 until 1929. At present he is Lord President of the Council.

The Whitsuntide recess, which comes early in June, was considered the most likely time for any Cabinet shuffle.

Presbytery Laughs at Item Beverage Room Expenses

Hamilton, Ont., May 16 (CP)—Members of the Hamilton Presbytery of the United Church of Canada today enjoyed a good laugh at the expense of the chairman of the body, Rev. F. C. Overend, Minister of Laidlaw United Church here.

The annual report of the Presbytery was being read by C. H. Wesson, treasurer. Near the end of the statement, he reached the item which caused all the commotion.

"Rev. F. C. Overend, beverage room expenses—$3.65," he read.

Ministers and laymen roared with laughter and it was several minutes before order was restored.

Mr. Overend had just vacated the chair and Rev. W. S. Dennis was officiating as chairman.

"Now I know why the chairman wished this job on me," he commented.

Later explanations were the small account was for out-of-pocket expenses incurred by Mr. Overend while making presents against the establishment of a beverage room within a short distance of his church.

Wilkins' Choice of Pilots For Antarctic Are Canadian

Herbert Hollick-Kenyon and Pilot Lymburer Noted for Daring

By Central Press Canadian

Winnipeg, May 16.—Hubert Hollick-Kenyon, Canadian Airways pilot, who with Lymburner, Sask., has been chosen to fly the Antarctic with Sir Hubert Wilkins, is known to almost every person north of fifty-three as "Kenny." On several occasions he has been known as Santa Claus.

"Kenny" took the first air mail of the season into Beren's river on May 5 this morning. Throughout the winter he has been on the Central Manitoba, Norway House and God's Lake run with the mail. Even during the vicious March blizzards "Kenny" brought the mail through on time.

His uncanny ability to fly through the thickest weather might be found in the fact that he is the only pilot in Canada to hold a Chicago British Navigation certificate.

Once, while flying from Beren's river to Island Lake, black banks of fog rolled out of the north. The passengers in the cabin could see nothing of the approach and the weather became more dense as the miles passed.

For more than an hour, Kenyon flew through the dark swirling fog seeking through the cloudbanks to put his Pokker-Super smack down on Island Lake. So far as he was concerned the fog might never have existed.

On another occasion he dropped down on Gardner Lake. A lone prospector bundled his outfit into the aeroplane and asked him to go around and take him back to about 40 miles. "Kenny" glanced at his watch and then at the mail-

Herbert Hollick-Kenyon

plane—and "get away with it."

His hurriedly flung the outfit aboard and roared off on his errand. He completed the journey in a lovely short trip and brought his mail in—on time.

This is the type of man selected by Sir Hubert Wilkins to pilot his ship over the South Pole. It was a tough job for Sir Hubert to make his choice from so much excellent material to choose from. But in picking "Kenny" he has a man of experience who can depend on a good engine and also has the nerve to land and take off in 1,000 feet of snow.

LEAD FIFTY CENT PIECES PASSED

Counterfeit Coins Are Hard to Distinguish From Real Ones

Local merchants are being flooded with an influx of lead fifty cent pieces of an excellent duplication of Canadian coinage.

Front street merchant had two of these bogus coins in his cash register this morning when a customer produced one quite innocent of the fraud. The local police have not been consulted in the matter but it is definitely established yesterday that these counterfeit coins were being passed in Belleville. Lead fifty cent dollars are manufactured in such exactness, that they deceive the eye, but according to lower front street merchants the lead coins soon set up a really nick owing to the softness of the metal used and can readily be distinguished by the sound of clinking along a hard substances.

Having three fine looking lead fifty cent pieces, that I'll sell at bargain prices, added one merchant, is now today. Citizens are warned to keep a sharp look-out for strangers attempting to pass what look like new silver coins

MARSHAL BALBO BACK IN PICTURE

Long removed from Italian limelight by being sent to Africa as governor, after capturing world attention with his conduct of a massed aeroplane flight to Chicago, Marshal Balbo is again being heralded in claim Mussolini. He's seen conducting Italy's crown jewels on tour of Italian Libya, which she visited with her husband.

Buchan Becomes Baron, Title is Not Yet Chosen

LONDON, May 16.—(CP Cable)—The King conferred the honour of peerage on John Buchan, Canada's next Governor-General, as a Baron, is not likely to be announced until several formalities have been fulfilled. Meanwhile the author and writer and parliamentarian will continue to be addressed as "Sir John." Announcement the King had approved conferment of a Barony upon him was made last night.

An Earldom of Buchan has been in existence since the 15th century. Ronald Erskine-Lilie Buchan, Mr. Scot—succeeded his father as 15th Earl of the line last year. This however would not preclude the Governor-General's choosing the following the graftic rather favored nowadays by new peers, of adopting their surnames as their titles. In which case he would be Baron Buchan. Nevertheless the semblance of duplicating titles is avoided as far as possible.

FIRE STARTS IN OPEN GRATING

Wisps of smoke curling from the sidewalk grating at the side of the Bank of Montreal on Front Street at three-thirty o'clock yesterday afternoon brought members of the local fire department to the scene after an alarm had been turned in by two pedestrians who first sighted the blaze. Rapping on the window of the bank to attract the attention of the time, the attention of clerks within was attracted and Constable called after mailmen had been explained. While police kept a large crowd of curious at a safe distance, firemen traced the smoke to a smouldering fire in the sawdust under the grating. It had evidently been lighted by a dropped cigarette end. No damage was reported.

Good-Bye New York!

Article No. 2.

By G. M. JAMES

Travelling Representative of THE ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER

The weather in New York for the past two weeks has been decidedly cool and rainy; our reliable thermometer just outside our bedroom window registered 40 at the present moment, a temperature 20 degrees below zero. As a result of such unpleasant weather street traffic (pedestrians) and shopping has been spasmodic; on a few bright afternoons however people came out everywhere like bees and the streets were very crowded with both people and cars. All traffic then could only move with the throng.

Perhaps the most humorious and beautiful motor cars of the world are to be seen here in very large numbers and in striking contrast to the small cheap cars we encountered three years ago in London, England, and elsewhere in Europe. Nothing is more notably shows the superiority of the American people in this foremost industry because the average value and excellence is high.

ARTISTS SUFFER.

Broadway's lights and shows are about the same as they have been for a decade with this difference, prices are steadily going down until now it may be very difficult for the world's leading artists to make a moderate living. The average admission charge on Broadway and Forty-second Street and other leading theatrical centres is about the same as we pay in Belleville. As many are finding indeed impossible to live in New York people here complain gloomily that money was never so scarce and that the bottom had fallen out of everything. Unemployment and the depression has continued so long that the means of support and resources of many people but also for necessities. The writer through direct contacts all over this city in a business way can confirm these discouraging details.

BUSINESS LOSSES.

Jewellers and all those dealing in luxuries are feeling the stringency most; we have seen many stores on Broadway and elsewhere where valuable stock was being auctioned off at ridiculously low values. As a result there are numerous empty stores, much less and discouragement, and further unemployment.

UNEMPLOYMENT.

Three years ago the writer for the first time realized what widespread unemployment meant when he saw large crowds of people without employment and in need all over England, Scotland and France. Such scenes often made him sad but one fine morning in New York his heart was stirred to its deepest depths. A couple of blocks from Broadway on Forty-third Street, he came upon a hundred fine, handsome, intelligent, young men grouped closely together before a small store.

"What are these young man doing here," I thinkfed of one near by.

"The makers of signs above the store are advertising for a helper," came the reported reply.

"Only one job available?"

"Yes, sir."

The tone and manner of this young man was pitiable in the extreme; there was no evidence of hope and courage.

From there I went on my way and turned on Sixth Avenue only to encounter a score of scenes similar to the one I have described. Large groups of young men and women stood before employment agencies all along the street and in silent eagerness read the various slips of paper which briefly announced jobs and wages, none of which would lead beyond the shame of a "back door" job. It was a terrible sight to see these fine young people anxious to devote their talents to the progress of the world but unable to do so. If the writer ever becomes Prime Minister of Ontario he will present a gold medal to every man and woman who creates a new job, one that has never been performed before and besides will automatically go on the Old Age Pension Fund at sixty for they are the real heroes and benefactors to-day. Something worth while must be done in this matter at once, or we will pay dearly in many ways for our shameful neglect.

POPULAR SONGS.

Again we wish to point out that young people, who possess musical talent, can acquire both fame and fortune by one good song like Gershwin's "Embraceable You" or Irving Berlin's "The Isle of Capri" already mentioned we would suggest "An Old Fashioned Girl" and "When I Grow The Old to Dream, Your Love Will Live in My Heart" for consideration and should such songs will polish the way to great success and world-wide fame. Belleville is noted for a display of musical talent lying dormant everywhere. A few days ago a talented young lady sang "An Old Fashioned Girl" on Broadway. During the first verse and chorus, the lights were slowly dimmed and, when they were suddenly restored, the sales girls, salesmen and bosses contained lovely girls dressed in all manner of old fashioned costumes. It was one of the most beautiful demonstrations we ever saw and the audience went wild with delight. The scene also suggested that this old world has always known and loved beautiful maidens.

A KENTUCKY COLONEL.

A few years ago we were on the field at Gettysburg where the last battle of the American Civil War was fought and where Lincoln delivered his immortal address. On the main street of the little town (Gettysburg) near by, the writer was accosted by a friendly American citizen.

"How do you do, Colonel B., glad to meet you again," at the same time shaking my hand vigorously.

"Thanks for the friendly greeting, but you are mistaken."

"Are you not Colonel B. of Kentucky

"I regret I cannot claim that honor; I am just a humble visitor from Canada."

"Well I'll take my oath you are his double."

This incident soon faded from memory but was revived a few days ago in the lobby of the Times Square Hotel by another genial citizen of Kentucky with the same conversation concerning Colonel B., but this time my newly found friend seemed to doubt me and to think that I was trying to play a joke with him. The office clerk had just handed me a copy of the Ontario Intelligencer from which I now removed the wrapper and displayed to his eager gaze my picture and article one. He read it through and then exclaimed:

"Of course I am now satisfied that you are not Colonel B. of Kentucky though you resemble him very much."

I got away with being a distant relative of Jesse James much better," replied much to my friend's amusement.

"I like your article in this paper; I have always contended that heads crowned with horny locks are full of wisdom and that they are the ones that will guide the Inexperienced. But the trouble with most of the mature men and women I know lies in the fact that through some words or deeds they have destroyed their influence for good. Then the source of one so loudly that no one can hear what they say."

This little incident is briefly reported because it contains a warning for us all. The best of life is at the end, for which the beginning was made (so says Browning) but keep the record clean or instead of a glorious sunset, life will end amid clouds and shadows.

SALES TAX.

A year ago we reported from Miami, Florida, that a two per cent. sales tax was contemplated there and that the merchants opposed it strenuously. Less than a year ago such a tax came into operation in New York and it applies to every article sold over the counter except food. Can you imagine what the revenue will be from the daily purchases of over seven million people, twice as many as in all Ontario, multiplied by the average sales tax for each person was only two cents per day, that would mean a gross daily revenue for the city from this source of one hundred and forty thousand dollars. It is an ideal tax because it is collected without cost by the merchants and paid over to the city by them without loss. It would be an untold blessing if all taxes were as sure and as easily collected.

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM.

We have long desired to visit this great institution here and the wish became an accomplished fact a few days ago. The building is modelled after the British Museum and the National Gallery of London combined in one but of course much smaller.

We spent most of our time studying the pictures, many of which were by artists with whose work we were already quite familiar.

Space will permit us to mention only a few of those we saw and made notes about.

1. "Christ and the Woman of Samaria." Christ is seated by a well and a woman is conversing earnestly with her water jug. Evidently she is possing of each all the story wonderfully.

2. "Portrait of the Artist," by Rubens. This is a wonderful picture because of its naturalness and because of the perfection and minuteness of details of costume and ornament. The observer feels she is breathing and about to speak.

3. "Portia", by Millais. This famous woman is standing with a paper in her hand and seems about to continue a discourse. And she is little over average height, and wears a loose fitting, simple, scarlet gown. Her luxuriant flaxen hair makes her seem taller because it is arranged in the Marion Pompadour style. The writer was attracted by the picture because it was so unlike what his imagination had portrayed for him for half a century. It was an inspiring picture but it slightly detracted from the drama.

In almost every room we found men and women copying pictures as they hung before them just as we had seen them at work in the Louvre in Paris. Without exception their work was execrable but merely copying a great work of art lacks the enthusiasm and inspiration of originality.

The men were young but most of the women were almost grey. We were soon convinced that it required much toil and time to copy a great picture.

FEMININE CHAT.

For tennis or golf soft linen dresses, low at the back and high in front tied around the neck with a bow, in all colours, will be much worn while jackets to match. Some dresses for immediate wear are of printed voile of chiffon, some flowered and some spotted, with short jacket to match the dress, all having the sleeves of chiffon with gloves to match.

Hats are very large, small flat crowns and wide brims, with a bunch of fruit or flowers in front of crown. The outstanding hat is a large Mexican hat of straw to be worn as an all-over covering of fine straw. The ornament consists of a large flat flowery made of lace (pink or rose) and placed on the side of the crown. The brim is lined with the same lace picture hats of fine straw.

Best of all are the panama sport hats and palm beach dresses of coal and skirt.

For beach wear there are large print cheeks and stripe dresses in sea-sickness with large pockets and flat crown made of the same materials.

GETTING ABOUT NEW YORK.

For many reasons New York is the easiest city in the world to go about. The underground trains are the most popular because they are running all the time, because they travel at the speed of express trains and because you can go anywhere for five cents. They resemble those of London, England, in that they are deep down but one has to go about fifty feet below the surface under stores, streets and hotels while in London the tube or underground trains are about ten feet below. They hold that this difference in some way is due to the difference in the soil.

Then you may go to many parts of the city on overhead trains which run above streets and small houses. We once went on the overhead railway.

Then there are the street cars (surface cars they are called) which run on the principal streets. On these you can go over a hundred blocks for five cents but they are slow due to heavy traffic and the red and green lights.

On Fifth Avenue and a few other streets you can have long rides for ten cents on double-decker buses and motor coaches. These are wonderful but cost too much for Canadians but one has to use them in all cities and because of the magnificent scenery. Taxi-cabs, brains and courtesy of the able-bodied gentlemen compared to many cabmen we have known. They are the most cheap. They are also the most obnoxious here from every point of view.

FIFTH AVENUE.

We spend much of our time on Fifth Avenue because the stores remind us of Paris and the way the large hotels serve refreshments in front under awnings reminds us of Paris. The throngs of people passing to and fro, the beautiful shop windows, the Big Houses, the luxurious cars and the vivacity of the people charm us greatly.

We believe that New York is one of the cleanest kept cities in the world. At night the streets are washed by powerful, motor, water, tank cars.

We sail from New York for Bermuda in a few days (May 18) and until we reach the sunny south again, best wishes to all.

The officers of last year were re-elected: Honorary President: Col. N. F. Hanley, K.C., M.P.; Mr. J. O. Herity, Mrs. Willmott; President: Mr. P. C. MacLaurin; Vice-Presidents: Miss Colen and Mr. G. Prof. Hunt, Mr. Ross Hunter and Miss Leona Riggs, campaign chairmen expressed their confidence in the prospects and felt that many more citizens would become members this season.

Miss Irmgarde Wetterman, representative of the central office of Massey Hall Toronto, explained that the spring campaigns invariably began the best results, however the enthusiasm over last season's concerts is still at high pitch and it was proposed that the local artists committee with a wider choice of artists, Jose Mojica, the famous Spanish tenor, famous group of English singers, who at Wigmore Hall in London, England, have appeared twenty times, are only available for a limited number of Canadian dates. She assured the committee, that with membership of 600 the best artists available. Other possible artists mentioned were Reginald Stewart, pianist and conductor of the Toronto Summer Symphony Orchestra, Ernest Seitz, The Toronto String Quartet, the musical revue with Jane Mallett, Fred Manning and Frances Hyland, Canadian soprano Jeanne Dusseau, celebrated soprano. ROAD CAMP BOYS TO MARK "24TH"

Arrival of Mosquitoes Is Expected Shortly in Camp

Stoneburn—It is very quiet in camp over the week end as the fine weather made it possible for a number of the boys to visit their home folks. We are all ready now for the mosquitoes to invade in camp in force, as the camp carpenter finished putting on our screens Saturday night.

Many of the boys attended a dance at St. Ola Friday night and reported a very enjoyable time. One thing we are happy to say here, the young ladies of this community are not above dancing with the gentlemen from camp even though the majority of us left our "dress-up" clothes at home.

On account of the alternating system our baseball team was badly disorganized the first of the month. However we picked a fairly good team to represent the camp and met the St. Ola "Old Hoppers" on Sunday in a fast game we held them tied until the last half of the ninth when the Clod Hoppers made one run which gave them the game score, eighteen to nineteen in favor of St. Ola.

Our new flag pole is at last erected in front of the office and good old St. George's Cross the finest flag in the world now waves daily over camp.

A number of us are already planning to be home for May 24th, so we would suggest to the home folks to be ready for a good time.

We are working hard but we are not kicking, just be glad to see us when we come, that's all.—

MARSHES BURN NEAR PICTON

No Damage Results From Early Morning Blaze

Picton—On Sunday morning between ten and eleven o'clock the firemen were called out to get under control a roaring fire in the Marsh. The origin of the blaze was not known. It broke out near the A. C. Miller Canning Factory and spread rapidly over the whole marsh. FEWER SENTENCES

The population of the Ontario jails and reformatories is declining. For the year ending the thirty-first of October last, the total number of persons sentenced to these institutions was 15,800, the lowest since 1926 when the number stood at 14,371. The reformatory population is at 1,287, as compared with 501 last year. Burwash inhabitants total 835 compared with 501 last year, Toronto jail farm 114 as against 196. While the number of persons sentenced jumped sharply in the prosperity years 1929 to 1930 there has been a steady drop since that time.

According to Deputy Provincial Secretary C. F. Neelands, young people had too much money and less home training in the flush years. The reverse, he declares, has happened during the depression, when most persons have done more serious thinking. In 1930 there were 21,254 sentences, as against 1923 figure of a total 8,036. Figures for 1932 were 15,804 and in 1933 were 14,528.

Such is the reaction of human beings to material things. Goldsmith once spoke of the place "where wealth accumulates and men decay." At times it looks as if the poet were right. The tendency of boom times is to create recklessness.

Sociologists and social workers have again proof in the old belief that exceptional men thrive best when given stern things to do. Depressions have two results, they depress people, some of them beyond the power of coming back. Others they stir to the first serious solid thinking people have done in years.

THE UNCROWNED KING OF ARABIA

Fate is ironic at times in the case of heroes. There is the story of a Greek general who passed through war unscathed to die by a missile thrown from a window by a woman as he was passing through the street of a city he was visiting. Now and then one heard of a veteran unwounded throughout the length of the struggle lived only to meet a tragic end in a car accident or a fall.

The great Colonel Lawrence, often called "the Uncrowned King of Arabia" is almost in the same category, though fortunately he has so far survived an accident. Lawrence set the world agog when he retired to become a motor mechanic in the British air force. He has just finished his term and was the other night motorcycling along a lonely English road at high speed, to which the daring man is said to have been addicted but he was ready to toss away his life in order to save the life of a boy bicyclist he met on the road. His action saved the boy but the one-time leader in Arabia suffered a fracture of the skull. It is said he may recover. In respect to this act of heroism, which was what the world would expect of a man of his calibre, it may be said that this lifts the almost tragic irony into another sphere—self-sacrifice to save human life. That one in a mere accident as some of these other ironic occurrences have been; it was deliberately chosen no doubt practically automatically and certainly naturally by a man who did not think of himself. The man who won a world of g'ory in the Great War has performed what may result in his death, but he was conqueror of himself.

Col. Lawrence is a noted linguist, archeologist and traveller and was working in excavation work for the British Museum, at Carchemish on the River Euphrates, when the war broke out. With the entrance of Turkey into the conflict his course was set as he gave up archeology to work among the Arabs of the desert. He possessed a gift of soldiership and leadership with intimate knowledge of the Arabs. He brought the King of Iraq into line with the Allenby forces. After the war he played a part on the Peace Conference and - in 1925 claiming unfair treatment of the Arabs he resigned his post, gave up his name and became known as 'Shaw', under which name he went into the British air forces as a mechanic. While in the air force he wrote a record of the revolt in the desert, which proves him a writer of extraordinary power. He has given the profits of this to charities associated with soldiers.

The man of mystery has a charm for the imagination of the people who will pray that he be restored to full health.

One should not quarrel with a dog without a reason sufficient to vindicate one through all the courts of morality.—Goldsmith.

In a false quarrel there is no true valor. —Shakespeare.

It is not enough to have good qualities, we must also have the management of them.—Rochefoucauld.

Coarse kindness is, at least, better than coarse anger; and in all private quarrels the duller nature is triumphant by reason of its dullness.—George Eliot.

EXCELLENCE

Whatever work a man does well
Still lingers in his thoughts all day,
Like echoes of a silver bell
When tinkling sound has died away.

Though with the morn his vigor wanes
When eastward shadows climb and creep,
This hint of happiness remains,
A glow abiding, strong and deep.

Whenever he has given all
Of excellence that in him lies
Although the task itself be small,
It has a worth no one denies.

It has a merit far above —
The work itself, this offering
Of utmost good, this patient love
Which great souls to their labors bring.

—Aline Michaelis.

HERE'S A PRESCRIPTION for a long and happy life, written by a man whose life was not restricted to his own orbit:

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine.

Learn to attend strictly to your own business.

Learn to tell a story. A well-told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sick room.

Learn the art of saying kind and encouraging things.

Learn to stop grumbling. If you cannot see any good in the world keep the bad to yourself.

Learn to greet your friends with a smile. They carry too many frowns in their own hearts to be bothered with any of yours.

CELEBRATION OF THE KING'S SILVER JUBILEE has astonished the world in the spontaneity of the expressions of loyalty from all parts of the Empire and the manifest love and affection in which the Royal Family is held. Every part of the week's celebration in London brought new sensations in the widespread manifestations of love and loyalty and the final episode surpassed all others when the King and Queen appeared on the balcony of Buckingham Palace shortly before midnight. An immense crowd, estimated at 250,000 was packed outside the palace and the enthusiasm was in keeping with the entire week's tremendous jubilation. So great was the surging throng that a number were injured and taken to hospitals, many were knocked down and others fainted. Over five hundred received first aid treatment. A feature of the closing incidents of the Jubilee celebration was the unannounced drive through the East End of Their Majesties, accompanied by the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of York. So secret was the drive that even the police were uninformed of it. Several times the royal carriage was stopped by traffic lights. Recognized by the crowds the royal party was enthusiastically applauded in Chinatown and through dockland, men, women and children, cheering wildly, surged about the royal carriage and many jumped on the running boards.

In the British Army of Occupation on the Rhine after the war, in April, 1919, when the edict against fraternisation was in full force, a Lancashire soldier determined to try his luck and made formal request to his colonel to marry a German girl.

He was asked in stern terms to explain his conduct.

"Well, sir," he said, "it's like this. I've been billeted in her father's house for two months now. Gretchen cooks twice as well as any girl in Bolton, and does three times as much housework."

The colonel delivered a Solomon's judgment. He demobilized the man there and then so that he might marry the girl without breaking the military regulations.

Mr. E. J. Butler expressed the great regret of the members at losing Father Corrigan and Mr. J. J. Trudeau, the energetic treasurer, made the presentation. The Rev. Father O'Connor will come from Brockville to succeed Father Corrigan at St. Michael's Church here.

It will be a good thing when the street car traffic is taken up on Front Street. They are a menace to all drivers and bicyclists.

Mr. John Campbell of New York is in the city to attend the funeral of his father, Mr. Daniel Campbell.

Yesterday was election day in the Township of Sidney. The contest was for reeve and two councillors, occasioned by the former reeve, Mr. S. T. Vandervoort, resigning and accepting the position of county councillor. Two members of the council had resigned to contest the township. The contest was a spirited one and much interest was taken in it. Considering the fact that farmers are very busy at this season of the year the vote polled was large, 856 votes being recorded for the candidates for reeve. The result was victory for Mr. Cleas Ketcheson, who had a majority of 46 votes over his opponent, Mr. M. F. Sullivan. Messrs. A. B. White and W. J. Knight were elected councillors. Messrs. R. Penn, F. Mallory, H. Ketcheson and R. N. Bird were the other candidates for councillors and finished in the order they are here named after Mr. Knight.

At the meeting of the Board of Education it was decided that the medal donated by His Excellency the Governor General to the high and public schools of Belleville on his visit to this city on the 30th of May last year, should be awarded from year to year to the pupil who being under thirteen years of age obtained the highest number of marks at the entrance examination to the high school. The board after examination of the returns found that George Edwin Eakins, familiarly known as "Ted" filled the specifications and declared him to be the first winner of the medal.

Mr. Thurber reported the loss of a black cocker spaniel with white front feet.

More complete information has been received regarding the capture of Riel. A despatch from Clarke's Crossing to the Mail says that Riel and some of his followers since leaving Batoche made toward the river, intending to join those who had previously crossed to the other side. The steamer Northcote with C. Company of Infantry and some of the 90th, went down the river intending to head them off. A number of Major Boulton's scouts in the meantime patrolled the river bank. In the afternoon they heard a whistle from the boat and some shots. A party immediately went in the direction from which the sound came and a couple of miles from Clarke's Crossing spied a party of rebels. They challenged them and replies were fired at. The scouts answered and Riel made a dash. The rebel party quickly scattered, but Riel was recognised and at once became the object of attention. He was mounted on a stalwart pony and set off at a hard gallop. The scouts gave chase and finally overhauled the rebel leader who surrendered without firing a shot. Riel was then taken back to the camp of the 90th, and taken direct to General Middleton's tent. There

DR. J. GOFORTH VISITS STIRLING

Large Audience Hears Address Delivered By Famous Missionary

Stirling May 16—(Special) — On Tuesday evening an interested audience were privileged to hear a splendid address delivered by Rev. Dr. Jonathan Goforth, who for nearly a half century had laboured in the Presbyterian mission fields throughout Manchuria and parts of Mongolia. Dr. Goforth, a graduate of Knox College, Toronto, left for China in 1887, where he laboured faithfully in the work, first in Honan and later in different sections of Manchuria. In recent years he was overtaken with blindness, and was forced to return home. But his heart is still with the people whose need is so great, and whom through long years of service, he has learned to love so dearly. It was with sadness in his heart, that he was finally persuaded to leave his post and return home.

Those who gathered in St. Andrew's church to hear him represented nearly every denomination in the community, people who had heard, and read of this great work in the far off fields were anxious to get a glimpse of this unusual man.

Mrs. Goforth Recalls Visit

The meeting was opened by Rev. J. A. Kotfend with the singing of the hymn, "O God, Our Help," and Rev. E. W. Rowland of St. Paul's United Church led in prayer. Mr. Kotfend then introduced Mrs. Goforth, who spoke briefly of the pleasure shared by her and her husband in being spared to return to Stirling, where they had had the privilege of speaking on a previous occasion twenty-five years ago. She was glad that some of those present remembered them from that meeting. At the conclusion of her remarks, Miss Margaret Rosebush, President of the Maple Leaf mission band, presented her with a beautiful bouquet of flowers.

At this time Dr. Goforth arose to deliver his address and his ability as an orator, and the fine message he brought served to rekindle the interest of his listeners in foreign missions.

"Great financiers in the home land are frank in stating that they see no need for foreign mission work," stated the speaker, "but such selfishness is in direct opposition to the Holy Scriptures." "If you love Me keep my commandments, saith the Lord, and His last command was 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel.' That command is there, and can't be taken out. How well do we heed this command—? It has been said, went on the speaker, that Queen Victoria, dear, sainted, lover lost it would take to have every soldier in her service respond to a command from her, and the answer was 'about six months.' Yet, as true British subjects we would rally to the call of the King as soon as we heard it. We would be unworthy of the name if we didn't, and yet this call of the King of Kings has gone unanswered for centuries.

"Manchuria covering an area larger than the province of Ontario, with a population of five million souls, has only four Presbyterian missionaries and one Chinese evangelist being supported by the home church at the present time. We as a church are failing far short of our responsibility, and we are not alone in this respect, other churches too, are failing down, and when a church fails to be a missionary church it dies. The world is in a terrible state of chaos and things will not right themselves until we get back closer to God and observe his commandments. The solution to all our problems is to be found between the covers of the book we are neglecting. After forty-seven years in the service of the King, I'm convinced of the satisting power of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If I had my life to live over again, I would give it to mission work and "hundred more with it," stated this consecrated servant of God.

"We at home here are we doing our part—? We can't all go but we can send and support others who are adapted to the work. The condition within our homeland will be greatly improved when we cease the pursuit of worldly pleasure and face life as the serious problem that it is. We must maintain the standards of all our Christian institutions and keep in mind that their original purpose is for the furtherance of God's kingdom here on earth."

The message brought by this man who has spent the greater share of his life on the other side of the world was one of great power and the extraordinary manner in which it was delivered by one who has found it necessary to master several tongues held the audience in silent interest. A short session of prayer for those labouring in the work both in home and abroad, in which members of the audience were asked to take part followed. Rev. J. A. Kotfend pronounced the Benediction.

MEAT DIET MAY HELP HEADACHES

Psychiatrist at Medical Convention Tells of New Discovery

Washington, May 15 (AP)—A diet rich in meat relieves headaches, the convention of the American Psychiatric Association was told here by Dr. Eugene Foldes of New York City.

This was discovered, he said, incidental to the development of a treatment for epilepsy. In the treatment of epilepsy, it was found, the rich diet is highly effective.

Headache, or migraine, and epilepsy are admitted by many medical authorities to "wet brain," a gathering of too much moisture. For this reason diets to control water have been used in epilepsy.

The rich meat diet helps to control this water formation, Dr. Foldes declared. He said that while its use migraine had disappeared altogether in a number of cases. In others, the severity of headaches had decreased or had not occurred so often.

In epilepsy, he said, "a response manifested in all cases, either complete disappearance of attacks or decreases in severity."

Along with the added meat, the carbohydrate or sugar foods must be cut down and fats carefully proportioned. Otherwise, Dr. Foldes said, the extra meat will do no good but can do harm.

Suggested Daily Diet

For a 165-pound man he recommend a migraine-epilepsy diet ranging from just under a quarter pound to nearly a third of a pound of meat daily. When properly proportioned with other food, he declared, this keeps the body from retaining the excess water which seems to set off epileptic and migraine attacks.

As a sample diet, Dr. Foldes suggested:

Breakfast—One glass (of orange juice, thirty grams (about an ounce) of toast with one pat of sweet butter, one cup of coffee with a major part of the coffee extract, one tablespoon of cream and a teaspoonful of sugar.

Lunch—A hundred grams (about three and a half ounces) of calves liver, raw or cooked vegetables with no more than 17 per cent. carbohydrates, thirty grams of bread and 150 grams of raw fruit.

Dinner—One hundred and fifty grams of lean meat, poultry or fish; raw and cooked vegetables as at lunch, thirty grams of bread, fifteen grams of cheese and 100 grams of raw fruit. One thousand grams make a kilogram which is equivalent to two and two-tenths pounds.

The luncheon calves liver, after treatment is well started, could be changed to lean meats, poultry and fish. After several weeks 60 to 150 grams daily of pie, cake and pastry would be added. Three to four glasses of water are allowed in twenty-four hours.

The "Adopt-a-Baby" Plan for the week of May 26th, is meeting with response from as far as the Pacific Coast, stated the Hon. D. A. Croll last night.

Yesterday two letters were received from Riverside, California, a letter from a couple who desire to adopt a little girl from an Ontario Institution to lighten their home on the Pacific Coast.

This is an early sign of the success of the campaign to mark the week of May 26 as a red letter week in child welfare by means of adoption in connection with the celebration of the first birthday of the Dionne quintuplets. Letters have been received from other places showing that the appeal centring it this province and adjacent areas and in every direction has all the universality of a child's smile.

Mr. Croll is pleased that the most spontaneous response has come from the province of Quebec.

"Everyone approves of identifying the rejoicing over the quintuplets' first birthday with a remembrance of children who are not having the forgotten," he remarked. "The fifty-eight Children's Aid Societies in the province had instructed their Treasury agreement with the plan to 'trade shelters for homes'. Inquiries from individuals about the procedure in adopting children have been numerous into the department and the various Children's Aid Societies in increasing volume.

"Steps have been taken by numerous societies," said Mr. Croll, "to enlist the support of other agencies, such as the local press, the theatres and the theatres in their communities, in connection with the campaign movement. The Children's Aid Society of Prince Edward reported that there has been a movement started to have child-welfare sermons preached throughout the province. The Welfare and Society has arranged to have speakers address Parent-Teacher Associations on the local moving-picture theatre."

Inspector T. D. Ruston of this city, has received a communication from Boston, Mass., requesting information as to procedure to adopt a baby girl.

EDWARD JOHNSON, GUELPH TENOR, TO MANAGE "MET."

Appointed to Fill Vacancy Caused by Death of Witherspoon

CONTINUE POLICY

May Give up Most of His Singing Activities

New York, May 16 (CP)—Edward Johnson, Canadian who rose from the ranks to the front rank of the world's tenors, assumed the active management of the Metropolitan Opera Association today.

His appointment to the post was announced two months ago by the retiring president, Lieutenant-Colonel Edward Ziegler, again last Friday by the sudden death of Herbert Witherspoon, was announced last night. It was received by the world of music with applause.

Johnson, native of Guelph, Ont., thus took over directorship of the Metropolitan Opera Company with which he has been connected since 1911, a progress, with ideas for popularizing opera by reducing prices and touring the "big city" circuits through the country. He is expected to infuse new life into its presentations.

The noted tenor was in Detroit filling an engagement with the Detroit Civic Opera Association when he received word of what he termed "the surprise offer of my life." He wired his acceptance and pledge of "zealous devotion to the Metropolitan Opera" before leaving for New York.

Before leaving for New York, he issued a statement indicating he planned to take up where Witherspoon left off. The big opera festival would go on as usual, he said, to be followed in May and June with a series of festival and grand opera. At that time it was the intention to present some of the famous operas by Richard Wagner.

"They are not to be so much dramatic, as educational," he explained, "to bring some colloquial interest to the familiar operas."

In taking over the guidance of the "Met" Johnson is expected to give up most of his singing activities. He created the leading tenor parts in "The Kings Henchman" and "Peter Ibbetson" and has been the Metropolitan's only Pelleas in Debussy's "Pelleas Et Melisande." The latter role is one in which he will continue to appear, it is believed. This raised the possibility while the opera company would lose Johnson's creative ability, its followers would all but lose the rich entertainment of his voice.

It was recalled following the death of Enrico Caruso, John Mc-Cormack was chosen as the man he believed the rightful successor to recognition as the world's leading tenor. Without hesitation he named Johnson.

Soon after Johnson was asked the same question, "John McCormack of course" he replied.

Edward Ziegler, with the Metropolitan for almost 20 years, will continue as assistant General Manager, the post he filled along with Johnson in the brief Witherspoon regime.

MEET GEORGE, GEORGE AND GEORGE, JUBILEE TRIPLETS

The first triplets born in Hull in many years, the infant sons of Mr. and Mrs. Aurele Roy, are doing nicely in their little incubator room at the Sacred Heart hospital there. The three baby boys were born at home. Mr. Roy who is an unemployed returned soldier and the father of eight other children, including a set of twins, was worried about how he would be able to give his wife the necessary medical care. Through Mr. Henry Blackburn prominent Hull industrialist and philanthropist, the mother and the boys were removed to the hospital and the tiny tots placed in incubators. The children weigh 3 pounds and 4 ounces; 3 pounds and 10 ounces, and 4 pounds. Dr. Laverdure, who is attending the case, states that their chances are excellent. Since the triplets were born only a few hours before the 26th anniversary of their majesties, all three boys were given the name of George. The christening took place in the incubator room as the babies were found not to be strong enough to be taken to the church. Mother and children are shown above.

Obituary

LATE MRS. DANIEL BROWNSON

Edgerado—There passed away at her home in Madoc Township, near Edgerado, on Friday, May 10th, 1935, Mrs. Dan Brownson.

The late Mrs. Brownson has been in failing health for some time, but despite all that medical aid and kind hands could do, she passed to her eternal rest on Friday.

The late Mrs. Brownson was born in 1873. Her maiden name was Rose Burke. She was the daughter of the late William Shaw and Mrs. Shaw, Madoc.

On November 8th, 1893, she was united in marriage to Mr. Daniel Brownson, and to this union were born four children, three of whom died in infancy.

Surviving her are, her husband, Mr. Daniel Brownson and one son, William at home and one grandson, Donald, also three brothers, Lewis Shaw of Alberta, Joseph Shaw, on the old homestead and John A. Shaw of Madoc Bridge. The late Mrs. Brownson was a member of the Standard Church of which when health permitting she was always a faithful attendant.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon May 12th at her late residence, and was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Ford, a former pastor, who preached a very impressive sermon from the text taken from Rev. 21:11 to a large number of sorrowing friends and relatives.

The hymn "Jesus Lover of My Soul" was sung by Misses Elsie Fox, Grace Irwin, Blanche Smith and Mrs. Smith very feelingly rendered "We Shall Know Him" and "The Last Mile of the Way" and the hymn "We'll Never Say Good-bye" was sung at the graveside.

The body was laid to rest in the Edgerado Cemetery to await the great Resurrection Morn.

The bearers were: — James Fox, Morley Fitzgerald; Fred Blakely; John Post; John Gawley; Joseph Chambers.

Four sisters, Mrs. George Bingley of Trenton, Mrs. David Scoddy and Mrs. J. of St. George's Anglican church in charge of the services. Interment will be made in the Carrying Place cemetery.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE
"Times Square Lady"
Two Features and Each a Hit

Powerful, modern drama, shot through with the brittle humor of Broadway, spiced with two distinct love stories running at the same time, the most important having that whimsical "Thin Man" flavor, that's an abrupt description of "Times Square Lady", Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new fast-moving comedy drama which opens a two days engagement at the Bell today (Thursday).

The cast includes a group of Hollywood's new stars "discovered" who are expected to contribute much to making screen history. They include Virginia Bruce, the statuesque beauty who recently scored in "Society Doctor" and "Shadow of Doubt"; Robert Taylor, the young man who leaped to fame with his dynamic portrayal of the young interne in "Society Doctor"; Nicky Tomlin, eccentric "ice-cabinet-crooner" who has rocketed to fame with rendition of his own songs, "The Objects of My Affection" and "What's The Reason I'm Not Pleasin' You"; Isabel Jewell, Nat Pendleton and others.

Also there is Helen Twelvetrees, lovely star in many successful photoplays, and such other established favorites as Raymond Hatton, Henry Hunter, Jack Daley, Robert Elliott, Russell Hopton and Fred Kohler to mention only a few.

"Times Square Lady" is a "different" story of New York night life, telling of the adventures of two town girl who outwits a group of high-powered characters of the sporting world. Don't fail to see "Times Square Lady", it's a fast and fascinating hour of entertainment.

"People Will Talk"

A dizzy comedy of married life interspersed with drama and youthful romance in which is revealed in "People Will Talk", the second feature attraction on the same program featuring Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, charming Leila Hyams and Dean Jagger.

The "Song Plugger", a clever and entertaining short subject will also be exhibited in addition to the above two feature on Thursday and Friday. Matinee daily 2.30. Evening performance start complete at 7.10 and 8.30 p.m.

AT THE CAPITOL
"Cigolette"
Night Club Secrets Revealed in This Vivid Drama

Adrienne Ames, as a society debutante, used to palatial yachts, huge estates, lavish town houses and flashing limousines.

Ralph Bellamy, as a Broadway sportsman, night club proprietor and participant in unscrupulous business with the underworld.

Donald Cook, as a rich blue-blood who travels between Park Avenue and Westchester in a speedy roadster and stops on everything in his course.

Robert Armstrong, as a lout, whose brawn enables him to act as cabaret bouncer, and his brain to taking orders.

Such are the different characters converged in an interesting study of types in the story of "Cigolette", the new picture now at the Capitol Theatre.

The quarter meets in the Club Hee-Haw, a gouging cabaret which forms the background for the thriller sequences of the picture. Miss Ames changes overnight from a blue-blood heiress to a penniless debutante. Bellamy puts her to work as a hostess in the Hee-Haw, where the girls encourage the male patrons to spend lavishly and uplift the intake with the management.

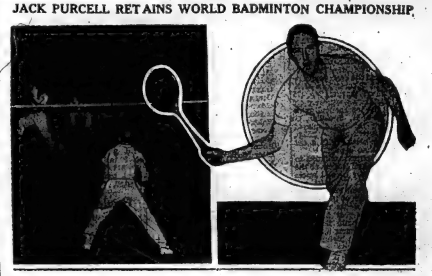
Into the Hee-Haw comes Cook for revenge. As a college sophomore he was neatly and profitably "taken" for all he had, and now is his turn. But when he runs up a large check, he refuses to pay. Armstrong, as the Hee-Haw's bouncer and Bellamy, the lieutenant, throws him out. The injustice of the situation fills Adrienne to see Cook home, and their romance begins.

IN SPITE OF DANGER

Columbia has chosen the life of the ordinary truck driver and transformed it into an exciting and suspense-creating story in "In Spite of Danger", which opens at the Capitol Theatre today.

Wallace Ford is cast as an ex-racetrack driver who allies himself with the father of the girl he loves in a trucking business. Lovely Marion Marsh, the girl, runs a lunch wagon to support her father and young brother. The romance between Ford and Miss Marsh is convincing, and the obstacles, which they must overcome before attaining their ultimate success and happiness, provide plenty of suspense and breath-taking thrills.

The crash of the story is reached when Ford is forced to drive a dynamite-laden truck, which the brakes have been greased, down a treacherous mountain road. The crashing of the truck over the mountainside is one of the most amazing shots ever filmed.



Arthur Hohl plays a believable villain. The father is expertly portrayed by Charley Grapewin. Charles Middleton, Edward Le Saint, Raymond Wessell and Jay Ward complete the fine supporting cast.

Complete shows 2.30; 7.00; 9.30.

JACK PURCELL RETAINS WORLD BADMINTON CHAMPIONSHIP

Jack Purcell of Toronto is still the champion of the badminton racket players. The Canuck wizard scored his way to a successful defence of his world's professional championship over Jess Willard, American cabinetmaker, in convincing fashion, when they met in Los Angeles. Purcell turned pro after clearly demonstrating that he was "tops" as an amateur, and he has taken and defended all comers since. He is shown in action above at right. Left, a thrilling moment in his match against Willard, who could not solve his court wizardry.

TORONTO METROS CLOSE

Toronto, May 16 (CP)—The big coppers assumed the leadership of the base metal group, Noranda and Hudson Bay adding 40 to 75 cents each and Coast Copper with an advance of about 90 cents. The wild market closed around 80 for a gain of close to 10 cents while minor advances were recorded by Pend Oreille, Big Missouri and Sudbury Basin.

Pickle Crow rebounded about 30 cents and closed around 3.30. Little Long Lac and Prospectors Airways, small gains were showing at the close for Castle Silver, Base and Peterson-Cobalt. Eldorado closed a few cents down.

Base Metal and Silver stocks had another morning flurry with higher prices general on heavy turnover and were inclined to rest up in the early afternoon in which period some of the gains for the silvers were trimmed. Spotty weakness and downgrade appeared in the golds on only moderate volume.

Hudson Bay, Noranda, Sherritt Gordon, Base Metals Corporation, Sudbury Basin and Wells-Amulet responded to the improved metal situation by registering substantial gains on heavy turnover. Noranda gained 90 cents and Hudson Bay 40 cents.

Mandana was a soft spot in the golds, selling close to 81.50. Contesting this display of weakness, Pickle Crow stepped up smartly to show a net gain of about 30 cents.

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, May 16 (CP)—The market closed another day's session that kept pulled up to 39 for a gain of 9, and Consolidated Smelters at 175 was up 4. Distillery stocks were off slightly from the top but had gains of fractions up to a Brazilian. F. B. and Ford "A" also displayed unimpeded strength at the finish, the motor stock closing with a net gain of better than a point.

The heavy turnover continued to rest with the oils and leaders of the group closed at their best prices registered in years. Imperial advanced 31, International Petr at 18½ and British American at 16.

All the base metals registered new highs for the year in active trading on the Toronto industrial board today while Noranda and metals were in demand at higher prices along with steel, utility and construction issues.

Imperial sold at 21 and International Petroleum at 18¾, both up a point and British American at 15¾ had a gain of 8. Nickel firmed 6 on heavy turnover and Consolidated Smelters touched 175, its best 1934 and 1935 price.

Interest held in the liquors and Distillers Seagrams was pushed up a point to 14¾ and Walker Gooderham 9¾ to 26¾. Brewery stocks recorded narrow gains, Ford "A" trailed along with the New York motor listings, to show a point advance to 27½.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, May 16 (CP)—Led by the motors, oils, steels, mines, rails and a wide assortment of specialties, the stock market today gave one of its most bullish exhibitions since last July.

The sharp upturn, which crowded the ticker tape at one time, was attended partly by a revival of inflationary psychology and partly to growing business and industrial optimism.

Chrysler was a star performer with a gain of more than four points. Others, up 1 to 2 or more, included U. S. Steel, U. S. Smelting, Case, Santa Fe, Westinghouse, Anaconda, Kennecott, Union Pacific and Canada Corp. The late tone was strong. Transfers approximated 2,000,000 shares.

Highest level since last July on one of the biggest buying waves in many weeks. Prices of leading issues rose 61 to 82 a share in trading so active that only a few minutes in arrears for the first time in many weeks. Steels, Coppers, Oil Chemicals, miscellaneous industrials and rails were prominent in the rise while utilities lagged.

Brokers attributed the buying to a number of factors including confirmation in speculative quarters of improved business sentiment; inflationary psychology created by Washington declarations of the possibility of passing the $2 000,000,000 bonus bill over President Roosevelt's veto; the remarks of W. P. Admiral, head of the Chase National Bank on the inflationary aspects of the bonus bill, and to further pressure of idle funds seeking investment.

WALL STREET CLOSING

New York, May 16 (AP) — The United States inflation bee buzzed little louder in today's speculative markets and stocks were pushed up in a boom-time spurt to the highest levels since last July.

Oils, motors, rails, steels, coppers and many specialties participated in the sharp rally which carried up prices 1 to 3 or more points.

International Nickel was a firm spot among Canadian stocks, while shares of Dome, McIntyre and Canadian Pacific ruled fairly narrow. On the curb, Hiram Walker extended its previous day's gain by a fraction. Lake Shore was steady. Dominion Government 4's were a trifle higher. Canadian funds improved 1-32 of a cent at 100.60 cents.

Among the best shares were those of U. S. Smelting, Cerro de Pasco, Kennecott, Anaconda, General Motors, Chrysler, U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, Inland-Steel, Santa Fe, Union Pacific, American Can, Case, Montgomery Ward, Allied Chemical, Union Carbide, Columbian Carbon, Du Pont, Westinghouse, Johns-Manville, Celanese, Amerada, Standard Oils of New Jersey and California, Socony and Mission Corp.

Blind Missionary Unfolds Story of Conquest of China

Rev. Dr. J. Goforth Lauds Home Mission Work

Blind as a result of forty-seven years of service on the front line of missions in China, for eight years in the new mission field in Manchuria, on the consummation of union in Canada, Rev. Jonathan Goforth conducted a mission appeal in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church on Sunday evening, as if in the full possession of all his faculties. Only that he was led into the pulpit by the Rev. W. J. Walker, and that he did not refer to notes or to the scriptures he read could be guessed that he had lost his sight.

Deprived of one faculty, that precious blessing of sight in the sense of the healthy, Dr. Goforth is of a happy nature. He sang with the congregation the hymns of the church, beginning with the Paraphrase of Psalm 100, "All People That on Earth Do Dwell", and Dr. Jamieson hymns "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" and "Glory to God Shall Reign Victorious" verse after verse. As he rose to speak he recalled the texts of the hymns the people was to be based. Then at times as he proceeded in his sermon he would hold up the Bible and as it were, read passage after passage but his hearers knew that his eyes were darkened. It was a touch of the missionary art to make his points across overtook him and it was doubtless this impression manner which appealed to the Chinese. Undaunted by labor, in a few years he has gone over the New Testament six or six times comparing it with the Chinese version, and yet he claims that one of his converts knows the Scriptures more completely than he himself.

A Happy Spirit

While with age and service, Dr. Goforth has the spirit and the zeal of a much younger man. Through, put his address there broke over his face again and again, the smile which expressed devotion to a service which calls for less of self and more of God.

The burden of his message was "How shall they believe in Him of Whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?"

"Some say", remarked the missionary, "as for the Chinese their religion is good enough for them, leave them alone'. But it is not good enough for them." Dr. Goforth forty-seven years in China and I have never met one who expressed content, but not one whose religion was good enough for him." Dr. Goforth told of one who climbed the hill by way to shrines, and who entered a hermit cell, but found no satisfaction for all his efforts. He became angry when told his search was in vain, but he became a remarkable evangelist for fourteen years. "He admitted his mistake afterwards," said the speaker, "that all his effort had been for self-glory, and God used to be the greatest religious figure in China. But in me was nothing of Grace".

The Chinese Scholar

The story was related of a famous classical scholar employed by the General as a tutor, to instruct the military officers who were Christians because of lack of opportunity in youth to study the Chinese classics. This scholar made three demands upon the General explicitated—that he wanted nothing to do with Jesus because as a scholar he was a Confucianist, he wanted to smoke, and he would not instruct in the presence of the Christians because he did not presume to teach them. After an hour and a half Dr. Goforth's talk the scholar yielded as he thought of the young man he was to instruct he did not smoke, and as a result he wanted to spend all his time with the Scriptures instead of instructing the officers in the classics. He has found that even his Saint Confucius was not all ideal.

Dr. Goforth asked the audience if they thought that personally they had gone all they could to help these people. These people must be taught of Christ, in their own language, he made clear.

Home Missions

"I've been out there tens of years and I had no special gifts in language, but in one thing, the perseverance of the saints," said he plainly, a picture of the Manchurian field, with a population of three to five millions in a province as large as Ontario. There the Presbyterian Church has but two missionaries and their wives.

The missionary gave MacKay of Formosa, the credit for his decision to be a preacher. His early aim having been to be a good politician. "If you want to save the home heathen, you can; if this is not only of your lips." Dr. Goforth told how he himself home missions would suit him and he said that this call was urgent. He worked in the slums of Canadian cities. Dr. Goforth threw down the challenge to the people to bring the non-Christian into the church and let the ministers instruct. Finally he said he decided to go to the foreign field.

The farewell of the Manchurians to Dr. Goforth, then blind, and Mrs. Goforth, was so affecting that a young man who witnessed the scene at the station on the Manchurian railway decided to give up his ambition to be an engineer and to enter missions, and be missionary.

Rev. Mr. Walker paid a tribute to Dr. Goforth as a missionary hero, one of the great. "He is a major-general in the army. He has no title of 'Sir', no K.C.B., but his name is recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life."

POLICE COURT

Two drunks, four highway tariff charges and a theft charge constituted the local police court docket when Magistrate Harold E. Butler, K.C., today. One inebriate was assessed "ten" and costs while an other drunk who was arrested by Ameliasburg by the O.P.P. last evening and himself remanded until the 22nd of the month, when he will be charged in the Picton court.

Delbert Latchford, Thurlow, appeared in the court charged with the theft of ten motor vehicle tires. The theft is alleged to have been committed in Prince Edward County necessitating that Latchford face the charge in that county. He accompanied the inebriate to the local county jail, later to be removed to the county jail in Picton and await trial next Wednesday.

Four charges were heard in the special Thursday traffic court. Two motorists paid ten dollars and costs for driving with one arm in a position, that could not really be called having the automobile under complete control. Both drivers were young men and pleaded guilty. A third was assessed $12.00, including the costs after pleading guilty to a charge of reckless driving namely excessive speed on the highway.

Fifteen theatrical seats are afforded warm sleeping quarters at the police station each night and were sent on their journey early today.

Odd Incident In Ireland Is Investigated By Civil Guards

Waterford, Ireland, May 16 (CP Cable)—Civil guards are investigating a strange incident in which the Duke of Devonshire, former Governor-General of Canada, is reported to have been fired at by a masked man.

The Duke, in Canada from 1916 to 1921, was peacefully fishing in the River Blackwater which flows past his Irish seat, Lismore Castle, when a masked man sprang from the shrubbery and accosted him.

Asked if the Duke of Norfolk he was scaled belonged to him the Duke replied it did and he was promptly "ordered" off the River. The Duke paid no attention and the man repeated but not before firing a revolver shot in the air.

Mother's Day

A very interesting service was conducted on Sunday morning in St. Andrew's Church when Rev. J. A. Kofford delivered the sermon subject on "Mother" and several of the members of the Mission Band assisted with the program. Splendid readings and recitations were given by Helen Pitcher, Isabel Tulloch and Jean Pafoe. The choir offered two special numbers, "Mother's Prayer" and "The Love of Mother." Mrs. R. H. Williams presided at the organ in the absence of Mr. Charles E. Allen.

Choosing his text from Proverbs the 31st chapter of the 28th verse. "And her children shall arise up and call her blessed." Rev. J. A. Kofford delivered a fine message justly glorifying the Motherhood of the world. There were many, he said, who were ready to recognize the idea of setting aside one day of the year for Mother's Day on the grounds that it was a sentimental idea, these are to be pitied. Any man who becomes so hard hearted in life he finds it difficult to display a little love and sentiment for the one who laid the foundation for his life in a pitiable condition. We can display a little love for her but hers is far beyond measure. Science will never be able to produce a recording instrumen on mother love and measure it. Mothers are like great motors they are the driving power of humanity and are always hidden from sight. Our newspapers blaze forth with fame of some great man or woman giving them all the credit for their achievement. But back of it all is the inspiration of a loving mother.

a group of members of the local bowling rinks motored to Picton to take part in the reception given to the Chief Scout Baden-Powell. The party remained together as closely as possible, and stopped at the Queen's Bush Scout Camp for lunch. Here, the boys were greatly interested in the many animals and birds on display there. The owners of the fine camp have been especially interesting of grizzly bear, deer, fox, wolves and many others of the smaller animals to be found in the Canadian woods. Among the many different kinds of birds to be seen are ducks of nearly every variety, owls, pheasants, and of outstanding interest a huge golden eagle with a wing spread of around seven feet. After an interesting tour of inspection of the various buildings, the party continued their journey to Toronto, where some ten thousand Scouts and over Guides gathered to do honor to their great leader. The visitors assembled in the natural livestock building and at four o'clock marched to their seats in the Coliseum to the strains of a stirring march played by a bugle band of the Toronto Scouts. Three thousand Toronto Scouts coupled seated on the floor of the arena and every tier of seats remaining was filled with the visiting scouts from all parts of the Province. Incidental music was supplied by the Toronto Highlanders band under Slater conducting. A most unusual display of demonstrations was given by 350 Toronto scouts and guides in camp. In twenty minutes these boys did tent raising, bridge building, first aid, tumbling, boxing, gymnastics, fire saving, and work were inspected by Baden Powell who was escorted by two of the Cubs.

The demonstration which took place in the allotted time of twenty minutes was carried through with remarkable precision and accuracy, and cleared away in the same fashion. Among the notables present at the event were Lord and Lady Baden Powell, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, Dr. Bruce.

The scouts visiting who attending this mammoth demonstration were Reeve Wm. West, Secretary of the Belleville Council of Year Group, also representing the commission; S. M. Ward, A. S. M. Donald Ward, Patrol leaders, Geo. Dafoe, John Munro, and James Ward. Assistant patrol leaders, Lloyd Rowland, Reg. Matheson and G. Sprentall. Scouts, W. Baker, Clarence West, D. Richardson, Jack Tulloch, Russell Dafoe and M. Armstrong. The last three mentioned were the pipers of the troup because of their fine achievements in the ticket selling contest.

Mr. William Rutnells spent the week end at the home of his parents at Harold, returning to town on Monday.

Helen Jeffrey and Clarence West contributed their share to this fine program in giving two splendid readings. The meeting was dismissed by Mr. W. S. Martin.

A FRIEND IN NEED

CHAPTER NINETEEN

An hour later the owner of a small town garage was amazed to see a beautiful, dishevelled girl walk into his shop. Beneath a most stained velvet cape he had a vision of a most stained satin dress.

Joyce had made an effort to tidy her hair—in large skins of the damp earth from her slippers when she reached the town, but her efforts had accomplished little.

"I want to hire a car to take me back to the city—" she explained with a pitiful attempt at dignity. "I have no money with me, but when I get there I can pay you—"

"Oh, sure, lady, that's all right—" For all his grease and overalls, the garage owner was worldly wise. An older man would given her fellow the slip. . . ran his thoughts not unsympathetically. Aloud, he said: "I'll get Tony to drive you. Hey! Tony!"

Bitter—that long solitary ride up the peninsula, sitting in the tonneau busy with her own unpleasant thoughts. Now that the excitement was over—now that she had time to think, the reaction came. She went to pieces, there in the car, railing to herself like a lunatic. She found she was trembling. Her hands were cold and her heart was pounding unevenly. Suddenly . . .

Joyce fell into troubled slumber . . . Dimly aware of some dreadful danger while her subconscious self tried in vain to alert grew upon her. She awoke with a little cry. Pulled herself together, trying to plan consecutively. She could go back to Nadine's apartment. She would find a place to live—some shabby, decent place, and she would find work.

She felt her feet go out in a warm little rush to the clang and roar of the city. Safe streets and lighted shops . . . people . . . Oh, there was safety in numbers!

Color stole again into her cheeks. She was poised again, quite prepared to meet Nadine when the car stopped before the apartment house. She glanced at Nadine's window sent a little chill to her heart. They were dark. Nor was there any response when she rang the bell.

For the moment Joyce was completely at a loss. She had no key, . . . no telling when Nadine would be home! How could she get her things? . . . How could she get her money tonight? A sense . . . Of what she could not have a sense. Think! There must be a way out! Think!

Where could she turn . . . In all this city she knew only three people, Nadine—Len Bates and Jeff Thertud. . . . she shivered. No one else . . . "spread of around eyes—a square face framed in greying hair . . . a hearty voice echoing in her memory—"If you ever want me drop in at the Local Hospital."

Impulsively Joyce had turned and run back to the car, where the driver sat smoking his cigarette. "Take me to the Central Hospital."

"Tommy Briggs, you're been playing favorites."

"Cross my heart, Kitty I'm telling you the truth! The most beautiful thing I've ever laid off the screen. So I ups to her and I say. 'Can I be of any assistance—' I told you she'd been crying, didn't I? It could see the tear marks in the mud on her face."

"She must have been beautiful!" "She was, mud and all! Her hair was coming down on one side, and her clothes were under her evening dress—and that was muddy too. And the car she was in must be model 1909 instead of Year One right after the flood. A lady in distress if I ever saw one. And what does she do—she spurns my kindly offer of help, and she asks for you."

"For me!" Kitty pulled open the pen with which she had been writing and the dark light grimaced in her indignant blue eyes. "Well, you can't help, why didn't you tell me before!"

"I had to lead up to it in my own way."

With a look of scorn, Kitty rose and hurried down the hall, her pique starched skirt rustling efficiently about her thick ankles.

Down at the side entrance of the hospital she found the shabby car the interne had described, and the white faced girl shrinking in the tonneau.

"Just until tomorrow . . . I—I'm desperate, I can't get in and I can not make a scene. . . . and I have no money—not even to pay the driver. . . Oh, I know it's a dreadful thing to do—you don't know me . . . but there was nobody—nobody in all this city I could turn to . . ."

Kitty was born to not emergencies. Her sharp blue face had already spied the curious face of the interne, who had followed, every freckle twinkling inquisitively.

"Here you, Tommy Briggs!" she called commandingly. "Be useful for once in your life. Pay this fellow—I'll fix it with you later. And tell Martha to go on duty in my place, will you?"

A minute later in her own room Kitty Dawson faced the weeping girl a little grimly.

"There's nothing else for you to do but stay here with me. You're lucky I have a room to myself—it's strictly against the rules but I have not known the superintendent of nurses 20 years for nothing! And you certainly can't go prowling around town in that get-up. And good cop would run you in! Now what's it all about? Had a quarrel with your meal ticket, I suppose? Were a fool to do that, Joyce."

Thertud—a girl like you. . . ."

Joyce looked up blearily. . . the tears still wet on her cheeks.

"Why—what do you mean!" she asked breathlessly.

Kitty's honest eyes went a little hard. "Oh, I'll help you out—you don't have to put up a false front. And honestly, I suspected you'd go crying back to him. . . . You chilly-looking dame was wrong!"

"You think —you think that I—that Jeff Thertud—Oh, no! No!"

More convincing than the words was the sudden deep blush that passed over her face, the deep horror in her voice was suddenly low and kind.

"Say kid, are you telling me I'll see I'm wrong? Has that devil Nadine been lying again?"

"I don't know what she told you but this is the truth," Joyce spoke vehemently. She started the recital of her acquaintance with Nadine. Ridiculously trusting, Kitty's kindly looking back upon it in the cruel light which Jeff Thertud's words shed upon it this evening. She told of the evening's happenings, and when she had finished Kitty Dawson's eyes were like round blue marbles.

"Well, I'll be a—" Kitty checked herself whispered softly to herself as Joyce choked on the last word and buried her face in her hand.

"Poor little kid, . . .thank the good Lord you had brains enough to come here!"

Half an hour later Joyce was stretched between clean sheets in the white plastered room.

Kitty had gone back to floor duty after providing her sudden guest with a very efficient, if hastily made up, bed of pillows and two wooden chairs.

But the tired girl slept in its sparse primness more sweetly than she had ever slept in the luxury of the other.

CHANGING PATTERNS

CHAPTER TWENTY

Now once again the kaleidoscope was changing pattern. . . Rose and gold—pearl and emerald—and finally to quiet blues, dull greys. Lazy days and dazzling nights giving way to a quiet, orderly existence filled with hard work and little pleasure.

Month after month a startling change in Joyce's fortunes. Kitty's warm heart had been touched by the girl who had come to her door in hour of need.

"That devil Nadine! I shouldn't known better 'n to have believed her!" she said indignantly between sessions. "She can't tell the truth even when it'll serve her purpose better than a lie. Gosh, I'd like to see Jeff's Thertud's sweetie. . . . . Then, defendingly, in answer to Joyce's instinctive shrinking—"Well, he'd never seen you. . . At that I thought you were a fool, cool, with your looks an' all, to hook up with that big fish, Thertud."

"I hate him!" said Joyce with heat. "But in a way—it was my own fault. I felt there was something wrong. Oh, at first I believed Nadine—that she was divorced and engaged to Len Bates. I knew that bond salesmen make a lot of money . . . "Bond salesmen!" Kitty echoed with a little shriek of laughter. "That" was what Nanny told you they were? Well—I guess Nadine's a liar. They're in it in a big way. Jeff Thertud's the higher up. Len Bates is his shoe-string. They don't any money all right—but imagine that devil Nanny telling you they were bond salesmen . . . Ha!"

"Nanny!" Joyce caught at the word. This conversation took place the morning after her informal adventure. Kitty Dawson's night off. She had slipped off her shoes and was comfortably sprawled on her own bed smoking a cigarette. Cigarettes were Kitty's one vice.

Fans Howl as Howard Wheeler Given Decision Over Riffon In Excellent Eight Bout Card

Stewart Warner Alemite A.C. to Be Congratulated For Program

ONLY TWO K.O.'S.

Crawford, Morris and Williams Shows Real Form

Unpopular decisions from the viewpoint of the majority of 800 fans were clearly demonstrated at last night's Stewart Warner-Alemite A. C. boxing bouts at the Belleville arena, when eight high-class bouts were presented. The paying public stamped disapproval upon more than one decision handed by the officials of the night, but left the arena thoroughly displeased with "home town" verdicts following the main bout of the evening when Howard "Dynamite" Wheeler of this city was awarded a decision over his crafty Ottawa opponent, "Flash" Riffon, after five torrid rounds. Wheeler and Riffon staged one of the fiercest five rounds of amateur fighting ever seen in this city, having fans literally standing in their seats, but the general consensus of opinion was that Riffon had won the honors of the main attraction, but the officials of the night judged otherwise and a general cry of "home town decision" was clearly heard throughout the building.

Eight Bouts On Card.

Eight fine bouts were presented and introduced by Maichmaker Glenn Allen, each and every bout being a top-notch attraction. On district titles were at stake as the card was purely an inter-city clash, which would well bear being repeated within the month. The largest fight crowd of the season was on hand to witness the fights that saw two knockouts registered when Gordie Morris of Brockville scored a K.O. over Jimmie Miller of Ottawa, the local boxer proving much the better while Howard Williams, former Canadian middleweight champion, toyed with Ted Clark of Kirkland Lake for a round and then laid the latter prostrate early in the second canto. Bill Crawford, local lightweight champ, won a decision over his Ottawa opponent, Fisher, after five torrid rounds, while another bout that pleased was the Vieau-Craine scrap at 135 pounds that saw Craine awarded the verdict that in no way pleased many of the spectators. Eight bouts in all constituted the card.

The main attraction of the evening was over the feather-weight route and brought together two district champions in Howard Wheeler of Belleville and "Flash" Riffon of Ottawa, two well-known boys at their respective weights. The lads opened the main bout with plenty of aggressiveness both being quite willing to assume the offensive. They met in the centre of the ring at the gong and stood toe to toe slugging it out, neither giving ground. Riffon used a stinging left to the head while Wheeler tried to bore in and centre his attack on Riffon's body with rights and lefts. The boys continued to infight for the first two rounds but Riffon seemed to carry a slight edge when he reverted to his wear-hit Crawford in the mid-section, but ing offensive tactics and carried the narrow margin victory and gain the decision.

After five fast rounds "Shorty" Fisher of Belleville obtained a decision over "Streaky" Collins of Ottawa, Fisher using a straight left hand to the head with effect. The bout proved fast and saw plenty of clean hitting by both lads. Gordie Morris, local district champ, experienced little difficulty in knocking out his lighter opponent, Lorne Miller of Ottawa, early in the second round. Morris proved the aggressor from the outset and was much the better fighter. After toying around for about three minutes Howard Williams, the former middleweight champion of Canada, knocked out Ted Clark of Kirkland Lake, while Bob Cook of Belleville was awarded the rather questionable decision over Johnnie Teale of the Airport after five terrific rounds that saw plenty of action. Teale proved the aggressor but lost his fights when he continually hit low and during the clinches, thereby losing points. In one of the most pleasing bouts of the night Jackie Graine of Belleville obtained the decision over "Kid" Vieau of Trenton boxing at 90 pounds. Both lads showed considerable ability and were willing to mix matters in a bout that saw plenty of leather tossed with "home town" raised the aggressor and won the favor with the judges. The opening bout of the night brought two veteran school boy scrappers into the limelight when Mark Storms gained a neat decision over Doug Robinson after three rounds of clean fast boxing on the part of both lads.

THE SUMMARY

flight to Wheeler who was quite willing to oblige and retaliate. The fourth stanza saw action aplenty and Wheeler forced to their feet as both lads tried in vain to land the well-known "haymaker". Caution was thrown to the winds and a torrid fight was on. Riffon repeatedly beat Wheeler to the punch with heavy right body blows, but the local scrapper finished the round strongly with two hard lefts that found their mark on Riffon's head. The Ottawa youth opened the final round purely on the offensive and landed two terrific rights to the head. Riffon had Wheeler tied up for the better part of the round but the local lad rallied to finish strong and was landing severe rights and lefts on Riffon's head and body in a neutral corner as the fight ended. It was one of the best semi-finals seen locally in years, but was mildly stated when Wheeler was declared the winner.

Crawford By Edge.

The semi-final bout of the evening saw Bill Crawford, another local district titleholder, eke out a narrow margin win over "Frenchy" D'Aoust of Ottawa after five sterling rounds. The lads fought cautiously for the first round, no damage being in evidence, D.Aoust proved fast afoot while Crawford seemed to be nervous throughout. The local lad found D.Aoust's body with two fast body-blows early in the second round while he also proved slightly the aggressor in the slugging bee that was entered into in the third stanza. The lads battled toe-to-toe in the next round exchanging terrific rights and lefts when D'Aoust drew blood. Crawford crossed D'Aoust with a right to the head in the fourth but the Ottawa youth stepped inside and hit Crawford in the mid-section, but the local lad rallied to punch out a

CAN FORBES DUPLICATE THIS?

An action picture of how Referee Jack Forbes may be called upon to separate Johnny Gyroffy and Bad-man Al Dunlop during the main bout of Friday night's Kiwanis Clubmination charity wrestling show. Two other bouts equally as good as the main attraction will also be presented and feature Dan Petroff of Russia versus "Bull" Steele of Colorado. The main attraction is a return bout with Elbout on Friday night.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Public opinion may be against some of the decisions rendered in last night's boxing bouts, but, it must be admitted that Promoter Clem Allen's show was one of the best boxing exhibitions to be presented in this town in some years. Personally we did not agree with more than one decision rendered by the judges and the referee, but on the whole the show was as advertised, a metropolitan presentation.

Without fear or favor we say that last night's Stewart Warner-Alemite A. C. boxing show was the best amateur boxing programme presented in Belleville since Hector was a pup, despite adverse decisions. For instance we conversed with Bobby Hilton and Wheeler after the main bout which incidentally the public thought was very much wrongly judged. Wheeler honestly was of the opinion he had won at least a draw while Riffon told us he was of the opinion he thought he was the victor. Personally we very much agree with Riffon but the judges voted differently and therein lies the story. Insofar as the main bout is concerned it was a hanpy, both boys giving everything they had. For the information of the fans we might say that Wheeler is more sentimental than appears on the surface. Knowing "Dynamite" as we do we have little sympathy for him, but he and Riffon gave the fans a real honest-to-goodness boxing bout with the Ottawa boy having the little the better shade, we thought, but the judges and the referee were in a better position to call the decision and they named Wheeler the winner. So what? To top the whole argument off, we interviewed the Ottawa boxers following the fights and they were all quite willing to return to Belleville and fight on another card which goes to prove that Promoter Allen brought to town some real amateur talent.

Before we go much further we want to say something of the work of "Kid Vieau" Trenton who lost to Jackie Graine of this city. First of all the Vieau-Graine bout drew plenty of applause and we still believe that Vieau is one of the best prospects in the fighting game in Ontario, despite last night's decision. Graine continually rushed his lighter opponent, but Trenton lad showed what it takes to be a real champion, even in defeat. We are not trying to belittle Graine for his aggressive victory, but, our humble opinion is that Vieau is the better boxer or fighter, as the case may be in central Ontario, that is at his weight. Incidentally Vieau did not lose his Belleville and District title as Promoter Allen tells us that no titles are at stake except in official tournaments.

At least the fans saw one good champion in action and that was when Howard Williams, a former Canadian champion, carried Ted Clarke for a round and then punched him into the land of nod. If Promoter Allen wants a headliner on his next bout he should bring in a suitable opponent for Williams, Like is available. Another decision that did not satisfy the majority of the fans was in the Teale-Cook bout. Referee Wells informed us that Teale's fouls and unorthodox methods robbed him of the decision, but why not tell John Public that Teale was the aggressor and landed by far the more punches, despite his TWO fouls.

'Tis seldom we wave the flag in favour of an official, but the work of Referee Bert Wells was far above reproach while the contestants were in the ring last night, but, if he has anything to do with a couple of decisions, well he should have been shown with the stripes. All foolin' aside, Wells did referee eight splendid bouts, always having the situation well in hand, but public opinion still does not agree with the assessors in the decision of the judges. As a parting jest we still want to thank Matchmaker Glenn Allen for presenting one of the best amateur boxing shows ever seen in Belleville.

Following the bouts we visited the Ottawa dressing room expecting to hear a howl that would about raise the roof from the arena, but contrary to our expectations the Capital City fighters only gave us the well known sport salute of "O, K. lad". On the other hand the Ottawa scrappers took the decisions of the night like sportsmen and definitely assured us they would gladly return to Belleville for a future show. Now we ask the fans, could anything be more amicable than that?

They tell us that the Aajmaas won the first game of the Wall Street baseball play-offs over the College Hill Cubs last night. The score was scorching like 13 to 0, we hear. Of course this is play-off series and maybe another story will be told after the next game.

Apparently something has gone amiss in the South Hastings Horseshoe Pitching League as we observe that a new league was organized right on the heels of the old one and this new organization includes three of the clubs originally in the old league, namely Thomasburg, Stirling and Tweed. The new league was organized at Stirling and will be known as the Six Township Pitching League, with Halloway being the fourth club in the loop. Whether Tweed, Stirling and Thomasburg intend playing in both organizations or not we cannot say, but have been informed they intend relinquishing their franchise in the local group. If these three northern clubs pull out it will leave Belleville, Bat tale Belleville and the Airport in the southern section. Just what the trouble is we cannot imagine, but apparently some person is dissatisfied one way or the other, but for the betterment of the sport the two leagues would be well advised to join forces in an interlocking schedule and forget petty grievances. This pastime is purely an individual effort as there are no gate receipts or large gallery to consider when the inter-clash so naturally a wide-spread competition should be most acceptable to all concerned.

Both the Peterboro and the Kingston entries in the O.S.B.L. have been in training for the pre-season training this spring. The Ponies are handling fifteen or more fast O.S.B.A. clubs in spring training games while the Peterboro "Sea Horses" are reported to be ready for the league's ball clubs for pre-season exhibition games with the Belleville Ball Fiends. Along these lines? Every available evening the Fiends have been most diligently working out at the Fair Grounds but one exhibition game is booked with Peterboro on Dominion Day. We also read in the Peterboro press that Mayor Napanee Gibbard are to play a game in the Liftlock City in the near future. When stamping in Gibbsonville recently, however, we gulmed Messrs. Gibbard and Gerow evening that no games have been diligently working out at the Fair Grounds but one exhibition game is booked with Peterboro on Dominion Day. We also read in the Peterboro press that Mayor Napanee Gibbard are to play a game in the Liftlock City in the near future. When stamping in Gibbsonville recently, however, we gulmed Messrs. Gibbard and Gerow evening that no games have been slated as the Fiendsters are hoping to stage a pre-season game when we were not in shape. They gave us a real lambasting, so naturally we have been observing the Fiends closely since last week or ever since," stated Mr. Gerow on Monday.

A nine pew silver trophy has been donated by the Tip Top Tailors to be competed for by the golfers up at the Belleville Golf Club this year. The trophy is especially donated for the annual field day handicap competition, one of the major events of the year at the Belleville Golf.

The Kiwanis Club has arranged the best card for their wrestling show on Friday night since they opened the spring season in this city, Johnny Gyroffy earned the right to meet Badman Al Dunlop in the main bout by disposing of Walter Parnell. This should be a corking bout. Petroff, who has been showing this week in New York and Boston, will be sent against "Bull" Steele, a newcomer to these parts. Frank Bevis has been given stiffer opposition against Jack Dallas, who was a semi-finalist here on his last appearance.

CHAIN LETTERS REACH STIRLING

Coins in Letters Slow Up Service in the Large Post Offices

Stirling—The problem of the ever increasing circulation of the so-called "Prosperity" chain letters is gaining much publicity these days and attention from postal authorities throughout Canada and the United States. While the craze has not reached in alarming stage as yet in this country it is gradually on the increase. In some of the southern states, where regular exchanges have been set up, and it is being operated on a large scale, the increase in first class matter being handled by the Post Office Department is so great that sorting staffs are kept going at top speed to cope with a problem that is looked upon by the average person as humorous. But the situation is getting daily. Where it will end is hard to say.

These letters which pass through the mail bearing sufficient postage to carry them as first class matter, have the innocent appearance of the ordinary personal letter, and because of that fact have numbers of them pass' through the sorters' hands unrecognized. Large centres are not alone the receiving point for them, for now they are reaching out into the rural districts. Several have been received in the village of Stirling in the past month by a well-to-do New York postmark. They are the same in structure as those received in other parts of Canada. A simple hand writing and asking for the usual 10 cent donation to be sent to the one whose name appears at the top of the list. The recipient is then asked to put his name down to the bottom of five copies and forward them on to friends with the promise that eventually he or she will receive the sum of $5,000 as dimes thread the mail within the next fifteen days if the chain is not broken.

Post Office authorities throughout the country have received instructions to be on the lookout for chain letters containing coins which are a patchwork on the mail cancelling machines used in the larger terminals. The weight of a letter with a coin will stop the operation of a facing-up table and a dozen men for two or three minutes while they wait for the operator to get the bell cleared. As the letter passes the separation system is in existence than the one to be found in Vermont, in Toronto, which office, according to records handled the largest quantity of mail of any office in the Canadian Postal service. So accurately is the organization that seconds count in every part of the handling. A large quantity of these chain letters were held up for service for legitimate business houses who use the mails regularly to contact the majority of their dealings throughout the Dominion. Each step taken by the Department to stop this chain letter racket is a step to maintain the excellent standard of service given to the people in the past, and which they strive constantly to improve.

CHILD MAY DIE, BURNED ON STAGE

Ballet Costume Takes Fire at Dance Recital

Montreal, May 15.—(CP)—Doctors have little hope of saving the life of Hilda Charles, seven, one of four little girls badly burned backstage at a theatre last night when their ballet costumes caught fire as they waited to go on in a dance recital.

Josaline Rire, 15, a also on the danger list. Betty Williams, 12, has responded to treatment, hospital physicians said today, but is not out of a serious condition. Marion Hustis, 7, also has shown improvement and is not in any immediate danger.

The flimsy dress of one of the children caught afire from an electric heater. Screaming, she ran into the group of children and their costumes in turn caught fire. Four were burned before the flames were beaten out.

HUSBAND HELD

MRS. JAMES HERBERT

Seriously injured, Mrs. James Herbert, wife of "Sailor" Herbert, former professional baseball star of Collingwood, Ontario, lies in hospital at Collingwood. She was found, badly bruised, lying in the middle of highway, Horhusband is being held by police.

CARRYING PLACE

DANCE IS HELD IN PARISH HALL

May Enter Softball Team In Trenton League

Carrying Place—Mr. and Mrs. Ross Carwrite of Smithfield, along with Miss Edith, were Sunday Tronton visitors of Mr. and Mrs. Hanmaker.

The jolly dance presented in the Parish Hall on Wednesday evening of last week was well attended by quite a few, the unpleasant weather, and there|is some likelihood of another one soon.

Sunday saw the opening of the Bell Service with the Carrying Place bank for the first time but only for the sale of refreshments. Tennis and pumps have arrived, however, and are lying on the counter, ready for business.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Taft of Brighton spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Mrs. Mosher, Mrs. A. McLaughlin, here.

There is reason to suppose that Carrying Place will have an entry in the Trenton softball league if present plans go not amiss. A meeting was held in Trenton last week, another this week, and definite preparations were made for an opening game soon. As in the case of the present Association, the local team will be Carrying Place main more than likely, with the personnel of its team.

Mrs. M. J. Wessee has been spending a few days as guest of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Wesse in Trenton.

Mrs. Ernest Boyd celebrated his eighth birthday on Monday with a party at which a number were present. Until recently Ernest lived in this community and attended the local school, but the family moved to Trenton a few weeks ago. Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Weese and Norman attended.

Many friends of Mr. Jesse Hearns will be glad to learn that after being confined to his home for most of the winter, crippled with rheumatism, he is once again able to be outside and visit his neighbors and other work.

Mrs. Gordon Weese spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Weese and family, Queen Street, in Trenton on Sunday. Other guests at the Weese home on Sunday evening were Mr. and Mrs. Weese and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Mahood of Trenton.

To protect the sides of the hulls of various craft stopping to pay toll at the Murray Canal bridge, a heavy railing is being erected this week along the limestone face. In the past various pleasure craft has found it necessary to fend themselves off with poles as a measure of protection from the steel varnished sides. Now this should be unnecessary.

Among those coming loads of Scouts to Trenton on Saturday were Scoutmaster Mr. Campbell Mesars. Harry Sager and A. H. Norrington of this community, and Chief Baba.

A party of officials inspected the proposed new road right-of-way across country from the end of the present highway at Consecon, to meet the Consecon road on Tuesday afternoon. In the party was Mr. T. Thompson, M.P.P. for Prince Edward, who was conducting the group. The visited road route is not favorable at all, but there point out that this change will do away with two dangerous sharp corners and will speed up traffic. There is a strong local rumor that the new route will be followed although it is doubtful if most are hoping to see the old road remain. Any case action will probably follow soon.

An unusually large hen's egg was found by Mr. H. Hennessey on Monday last. When measured the egg showed a length of four and one-half inches while its circumference around the centre was six inches.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry LaTour and Master George left early on Saturday last for a motor trip to Ottawa and other points. Mrs. LaTour's sister Mrs. Wallace Bingley for Mr. and Mrs. Bingley, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Bingley and Miss Bingley. The trip proved most enjoyable and the weather fine, and without mishap they returned on Monday.

Miss Alice Splaty of Hamilton is spending a few weeks with Mr. and Mrs. Will LaTour.

No service was held in the United Church on Sunday, that being the "skip-Sunday" when it was impossible for the minister to visit the appointment, but the Sunday School met as usual. Mother's Day services were held in the church the Sunday before.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hardy, Sr., of Toronto, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dempsey at Albury.

Miss Elsie Pilchett spent the week-end at her home in Belleville.

Numbers of little evergreen trees have been set along the borders of the Trenton highway by the maintenance force who serve as shade trees and windbreaks in days to come. This is part of the government's reforestration scheme. More recently the men have been melting tar and filling the crevice in the centre of the road.

Old Dutch in the kitchen's just right,
It keeps everything polished up bright,
Won't scratch, that is sure,
Because it's made purey
Saves money and makes hard work so light.

Old Dutch cleans quicker without scratching, saves work and money and keeps homes shining with health-like cleanliness. It's different because it is made with pure SESMOTITE (pronounced Sis'-mo-tite), a scratchless cleaning and polishing material of volcanic origin that is scientifically processed and combined with other fine ingredients to give Old Dutch its unique cleaning action—

Protect your investment in your home by keeping porcelain bathroom equipment, refrigerators, stoves and kitchen utensils bright with Old Dutch. It is strictly free from destructive grit—safe to use on any surface not harmed by water. It's kind to sensitive hands, doesn't clog drains, is odorless and removes odors.

Daily Short Story

Life's a Funny Thing

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Life's a funny thing. Yep, I know what I'm talking about. Almost seventy years of it has passed for me, forty of those in the medical profession. In that time I had seen strange things, met strange people and heard many a queer tale.

Love's a funny thing, too. It can raise you to the highest pinnacle, sink you to the lowest depth of despair. Reading a news item the other day only proves the above statement. The item was short, buried in the paper where the average reader would only give it a glance. But if that same average reader only knew the story behind it, I think he would regard life different. The story reads:

Utroy, N.Y.—James Wilson, 36, a chemist, died today in his home by inhaling gas fumes. No reason could be discovered for his sudden death. Wilson was the hero in the Ajax Chemical explosion a year back. He saved three fellow workers though terribly injured himself."

That's all there was in the paper about Jim's death, but the "no reason" part in the story can be cleared up now. I met Jim when I attended him after the accident. The burning acid had left a terrible scar on the left side of his face. Even time couldn't remove it.

Well, Jim seemed to take it philosophically—working along each day at his old job—until he went for a walk one evening and met Jane Peters. She was alone near a park bench with a little dog on a leash. As Jim passed her, the dog broke away, scurrying after a cat. Jim caught it and brought it back to where the girl was standing. They talked for a while and then Jim left.

Made Her Again

The next night found Jim again walking through the park hoping that he would meet the "girl and the dog." He did. At the same place and always with the little dog. Jim always kept the right side of his face towards Jane, assuming of the jagged scar that ran from brow to chin. It was dark, too, that helped. Only the small park lights above, lighting up a small area of space. Jim was thankful for that.

He thought it strange after the sixth meeting that Jane would not allow him to see her home. Always she made him leave first. And Jim was fast falling in love with the "girl of the park." He didn't want that. But who are we mortals to fight the gods of Love? That scar she couldn't bring himself to let her see it. Maybe it would the next likely was—who knows.

Night after night he brooded in his room. He learned to love the girl, but she—well—she liked him but acted cold—indifferent. He cursed the injustice of life. Why did he have a face like a monster? He couldn't ask any girl to marry him, ever.

Each night after leaving Jane he would go home to his room and think. Think of a way out. There was none. None that would lead to happiness at any rate. Finally an incident happened that made it too much to bear. It was just the night before his death. That night Jane had reached out her hand and touched the left side of his face. The park light shined directly on it, too.

She must have known then, Jim thought to himself though she didn't speak. He could never see her again. Mortally, he thought there was only one thing to do. He did it.

Suicide

Returning to his room, he entered quietly, fearful of disturbing the other roomers. He opened the jets on the small gas range and lay down on the bed.

If our story ended here it wouldn't bear out the injustices in life as they really are. Grim realities do not do the scene shifts.

That was the evening of the next night, after I had read the story, that I entered the Peters home.

Jane was sitting by the window. I walked over and she bumped me the scent. Yes, you might have guessed it by now. Jane was blind. Had been since an automobile accident five years before.

She told me the story — her story. She loved Jim. But she couldn't, now—she was never going to the park again. She couldn't let him know. I knew Jim was dead, but couldn't tell her. She will go through life thinking she herself is to blame for the shattered romance. Maybe it will be better that way.

Piles Go Quick

Under Dr. Leonhardt's Internal Method

Large numbers of sufferers from itching, bleeding or protruding piles have learned that quick and lasting relief can be accomplished with an internal medicine, when salves do not help and wish is to escape operation.

Bad circulation of the blood in the lower bowel causes piles. The veins are flabby, the bowel walls weak—the parts lifeless. To end Piles an internal medicine should be used to stimulate the circulation and help to heal the affected parts.

Dr. Leonhardt was one of the first to discover a real internal Pile remedy. He called his prescription HEM-ROID and prescribed it for large numbers of patients with a fine record of success and then decided every Pile sufferer should be able to get HEMROID tablets from their own druggist, with money back if not joyfully satisfied with the help one bottle gives.

So isn't it wise when other ways fail to go to J. S. McKeown, who says, "No matter what kind of Piles you have, one bottle of HEM-ROID tablets must show you the safe clean way to get rid of your Pile misery or money-back.

WAR DEBT PACT MUST PRECEDE STABILIZATION

British Government Informs Negotiator of Decision

POUND BELOW 4.86

No Settlement Seen so Long as U.S. Drains World Gold

(By Paul Louis Bret)

(Copyright 1935, by the Havas News Agency)

LONDON, May 17.—The British government has formed a private negotiator representing the United States that Great Britain will not consent to stabilize the Pound Sterling unless the war-debt question is definitely settled and other specific understandings are reached between the two nations, today's stabilization level slightly below $4.86 to the Pound.

Week of Activity

It is learned in semi-official representative of President Roosevelt has spent a week conferring secretly at Washington with Neville Chamberlain with high officials of the British and French Finance Ministries.

This representative is understood to be Prof. John White of the University of Wisconsin, an Economics and Monetary authority, who sailed westward last night on the President Harding.

It is understood he had his final conversations yesterday before sailing with Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, Economic adviser to the British Government.

Sir Frederick, it is understood, told Prof. White the British Government cannot arrange stabilization so long as certain other conditions have not been met by the United States Government.

Gold Draining

Great Britain, he said, wants definite settlement of the War Debt question to precede any stabilization understanding. He added no settlement could be reached so long as the United States continued to drain half the world's gold production and simultaneously conserve a favorable trade balance.

Sir Austen Chamberlain's address yesterday may be considered a reply to Sir Frederick's definition speech of Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the United States Treasury and the private meetings of Prof. White.

It is believed in financial circles here the Ministerial conversations will be resumed if Washington gives London to understand the Pound could be fixed in terms of the dollar, at a point at little below $4.86.

Gentlemen's Agreement

It is understood that the fixation of the pound will be by a sort of "gentleman's agreement" or de facto stabilization. The following by a formal accord after experience had proved the value, or lack of value, of this method. It is believed that a de facto stabilization might be long, but it is understood the British are frankly reluctant to fix the pound by any form of reported conviction that the gold-bloc nations will necessarily devaluate.

Until the formation of the gold-bloc, British Treasury officials are understood to have been confident even to fix a temporary parity.

LEGION FAVORS VETERAN FOR VACANT GOVERNORSHIP

Chatham, Ont., May 17—(CP)— That preference should be given to a war veteran when an appointment is made to vacant position of Governor of Ontario Gaol is the nature of a memorial from the Canadian Legion here to Hon. H. Nixon, Provincial Secretary.

The position of Governor became vacant with the death of Mr. Shaw some weeks ago, and, it is reported, is to be filled soon.

Shadowy Figure in Belfry May be Virgin, Some Say

Middletown, Conn., May 17—(CP)—Residents of Middletown are willingly talking today about the white, shadowy figure which stood prominently forth in the middle of the arch of the belfry at St. Sabastian's Catholic church this week and which many say was that of the blessed virgin.

Priests at the church said the apparition was difficult of explanation but it attracted an estimated 4,000 persons Wednesday night. Many parked their automobiles and stood on neighboring lawns for hours at mid-night. Thursday, after reports of the figure spread throughout Middletown.

Sketchbirds were played on the figure, which seemed to melt away by the morning when the light became were turned off.

A few of the spectators said it was merely a shadow but the majority voiced themselves as saying that there was something unreal and holy about it.

Women came, saw and returned home to bring their children, then stand for several hours again to rapt awe at the wraith like vision.

FAMOUS ANIMAL TRAINER CLAWED TO DEATH

Herman Ziegler, one of the world's greatest animal trainers, died at Monterey Park, Calif., as a result of an attack by 18 full-grown lions he was putting through their paces at Gay's lion farm at El Monte, near Los Angeles. A mis-step in the lion cage, when he stumbled and fell, brought the snarling pack of beasts upon him. His mangled form was dragged into a narrow entrance way by the lions, where attendants, using tear gas, managed to extricate him. Layout shows Ziegler and the jungle beasts in the runway where they dragged his mangled body.

Fair Placed in Class "B", New Rating is Announced; Prize List Reaches $6,000

Federal Department of Agriculture Gives Approval

REVISING OF LIST

Belleville Exhibition is Given High Rating By Department

Belleville Agricultural Fair has been elevated to Class "B" status by the Dominion Government Department of Agriculture and will carry a prize list to the value of approximately $6,000.00 in 1935.

Seven fairs throughout the Dominion were elevated to the standing of a Class "B" fair and will receive certain financial grants from the Government under certain conditions, Dominion Minister Weir, Agriculture and Secretary Malcolm announced today.

Extensive additions to the Belleville Fair's prize list will be necessary before the most fall exhibition could qualify as a Class "B" fair. The dates for the Belleville Fair this year are September 23, 24, 25 and 26 inclusive. Under the new Class "B" regulations larger and more extensive prize lists for cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, grain, roots, vegetables and dairy products are the only exhibits recognized by the Federal Government in their grants under certain rules and regulations which must be adhered to.

The judging department for boys and girls under the age of 21 years must be sponsored by all Class "B" fairs at a reputed cost of nearly $500.00 for prizes. The junior exhibitors must be members of a recognized junior club and exhibit calves, seed grain, swine, horses or fine arts.

"This announcement of the elevation of our fair to a Class "B" rating will hold up the release of our prize list for at least ten days, as it has to be completely revised owing to the large number of changes that are necessary and the many additions to our prize list," said the Secretary. The Belleville Fair Board has endeavoured for some time to have its fair recognized and placed in Class "B" rating.

The Legion horse racing, a new midway and free attractions in front of the grandstand have been planned for the 1935 exhibition, as well as other special attractions of an educational nature.

500,000 POLES PAY LAST TRIBUTE

Impressive Military Review Climaxes Farewell

Warsaw, May 17 (CP)—An impressive military review with airplanes circling overhead today climaxed Warsaw's farewell to the great warrior-patriot Marshal Joseph Pilsudski before he is laid in his last resting place at Krakow.

At Mokow airfield, outside Warsaw, detachments of light cavalry, infantry and artillery filed past the gun carriage upon which rested the body of the beloved leader who lived to see his dream of an independent Poland become a reality.

Previously a distinguished gathering of Polish and foreign notables passed St. John's Cathedral for funeral services while outside hundreds of thousands of the dead dictator waited in close pressed throngs in the vain hope of viewing his body. Twenty-three persons suffered broken arms in the tremendous crush outside the cathedral where Pilsudski's body lay in state. Many others fainted or suffered minor injuries. Despite steely rain, it was estimated 500,000 persons had come to Warsaw from the provinces.

Goering Guarded

Conspicuous in the procession for the special protection given it was the automobile of Getrard Hermann Wilhelm Goering, German Air Minister. Police had orders to guard against any attempt on his life.

A requiem mass was read by Cardinal Rakowski while the Polish car church choir chanted. Bishop Oswilina, chaplain of the Polish army Pilsudski, headed as Minister of War, delivered the funeral service while many mourners wept audibly.

An impressive funeral concept. The body took six and one-half hours to pass, carried the coffin to the airfield five miles away where some 80,000 mourners were gathered.

Residents in the vicinity of the fire rendered all possible aid after the alarm had been given and were successful in saving a number of farmhouses containing valuable boats.

TWILIGHT SLEEP PROVES SUCCESS

Cases of Mild Insanity Treated By Sleep and Suggestion

(By Howard W. Blakeslee)
(Associated Press Science Editor)

Washington, May 17 (AP)— Twilight sleep for men as well as women, curing mild insanity of both sexes, was reported to the American Psychiatric Association today.

Several successful cases were described, including one that might be called block mentality," a man caught in the 1929 crash, who not only broke mentally but was in physical pain.

This form of sleep, which he called "twilight narcosis," was described by A. L. Skoog, M.D., of Kansas City. He gives the patients a form of sodium amytal which puts them into a conditions resembling drugged sleepiness.

They can speak occasionally but are mostly too drowsy even for that. The condition lasts for hours during which the physician talks to them. His words are the only movement

The business cracked up after 1929 was worried, slept poorly, was unable to work, had pains in the back and other symptoms resembling of some parts of his body, and spoke of fear.

Examination showed no disease. He was put to sleep twice, 12 days at a time, three times his case talked, telling him he could hope for full recovery, that he had no internal disorders; that he was not shriveled and that his brain was normal.

A few weeks of rest followed and the man resumed his business, wealthy and returned to business.

CONVENT BURNS SISTER AND THREE FIREMEN PERISH

Outbreak Had Origin In Kitchen In Early Hours

MANY RESCUED

Aged Sister Dies From Heart Failure Due To Shock

Joliette, Que., May 17.—(CP)— Fire destroyed the convent of the Sisters of the Congregation of Notre Dame here early today and three firemen perished as they fought the flames. An aged nun, Sister St. Elaine, 75, died of heart failure shortly after the fire broke out in the kitchen of the convent. All the occupants, 53 children, 45 aged persons, nurses, and 50 religious sisters, escaped the fire, led to safety by the firemen.

The dead:

Sister St. Elaine, 75.

Fireman Louis Chartier, 22.

Fireman Gilbert Fleury, 50.

Oscar Fleury, 23, son of volunteer fireman.

Fireman Jean Lecuyer, 42, was seriously injured and was removed to the hospital in a critical condition.

The convent and Normal School, built in 1875, were totally destroyed.

Starts in Kitchen

The outbreak had its origin in the kitchens of the institution and spread rapidly through the building, 300 feet by 75 feet deep, and rose to the four upper storeys. Nuns started to lead the children and pensioners to safety, the alarm, supplemented by a host of volunteers, spread to the town and all the firemen and police were called to the scene.

The shock and excitement proved too much for the aged Sister St. Elaine, who succumbed soon after while the fire was at its height.

The firemen fought a losing fight with the flames and Chartier, Fleury and Perland were cut off by the flames and perished. Lecuyer was dragged unconscious from the burning building by his comrades.

The firemen telephoned immediately to Montreal for aid and two gasoline pumping engines were dispatched to Joliette, arriving at seven to help the local firefighters.

As soon approached Joliette and Montreal firemen pounded over still pouring streams of water on the blazing building, which is apparently doomed to total destruction.

Sister Ste. Helene collapsed and died in a nearby building where she had the sad duty to survivors of the fire to sough refuge.

Firemen Fleury, Chartrand and Lecuyer, aided by Volunteer Perland, were trapped by a falling wall. Lecuyer was dragged out alive, and they were unable to get out from under the falling debris of brick, stone and blazing wood. Other firemen rushed into the pall of dust and debris and recovered but the others were dead.

It was the worst fire in the history of this town, 45 miles northeast of Montreal.

Session Legislation Passed Praised by W.E.Tummon M.P. At Conservative Meeting

Thurlow Conservatives Gather for Monthly Meeting

SHORT ADDRESSES

Thurough Check of Voter's Lists Is Advised

Coupling his statements, that the Conservatives of South Hastings have never more ready and willing to tackle an election than at the present time with a plea for all voters of the riding to make sure their names were on the voters' lists, Mr. W. Tummon, M.P., for South Hastings and standard bearer for South Hastings at the coming federal election also warned his hearers at an overflow meeting of Conservatives in Canadian Orange Hall last evening, that a stiff fight loomed ahead.

The Dominion election will probably be held during the latter part of September, stated Mr. Tummon "But," he added, "We're ready for it I've been all through the riding of South Hastings and I have never met the Conservatives so ready and willing to go to work as I have at this election. I appreciate the honor of being selected as candidate for the riding. I intend to fight, fight, fight but one idea and that is to win."

Particularly Mr. Tummon warned his hearers of the danger of being left off the lists following the revision of the Franchise Act. "If you are not on this list you should apply to the registrar of electors for South Hastings, Thos. Jarrett, Trenton. Process is Form No. 10, personally or by letter, or even the services of an agent if you wish when this form is completed send it back. This can be done any time before June 15th, but the sooner the better. A court of revision will be held in Carnilton on June 12," he pointed out.

"There are some eighty polls in this riding and a few votes missed at each poll may decide the election," added Mr. Tummon, strongly urging the poll chairmen and committees of each ward to make a thorough check up of voters in their particular territory.

Reform Enunciated

Mr. Tummon moved rapidly in his address to the matter of reforms lately enunciated by Hon. R. B. Bennett. He called attention to statements made by the leader of the opposition, wherein the sincerity of the Conservative leader was said to have been questioned. "Any man who has sat for hours with him in the House, as I have as I have dare not doubt the Hon. Mr. Bennett's sincerity," he challenged. "There is no more sincere man in Canada in regard to reforms than Mr. Bennett."

Briefly the speaker enumerated the various reforms that have been brought in by the Conservative party. The Act creating the Central Bank of Canada "Bennett was the first Prime Minister, who ever rose from the throne to claim the right of control in Canada. There is only one object in this—to serve the people of Canada in their best interests. Bennett is not afraid to tackle the big interests when it comes to the betterment of condi-

Pecks at Copper Tho' Cop Shoots

Chicago, May 17—(AP)—The best way to catch Adolphus is to be a detective, said Adolphus Pick, Jr., 18, who pleaded guilty to stealing $200,000 worth of copper wire from telephone and telegraph companies.

Pick, who said Adolphus the wonderful, would give up but Adolphus is made of sterner stuff, was sentenced to Marion by Judge Philip Sullivan.

Pick, who said he and Phillips family got no sleep again this morning. It is Adolphus's custom to prowl about before sunrise and beat a tattoo on the Phillips' copper drain pipe.

The big idea today was to discourage Adolphus by coating the drain pipe with tar.

Five o'clock found the Phillips family sleeping fitfully. At 5:15 there was a muffled drumming sound. That was Adolphus. At 5:20 the tar was there and Adolphus was imitating riveting machines.

Then, Ray Mullins, 17, a Phillips sham police was out with two assistants bent on stinging Adolphus with B-B shot from an air gun. The three took turns at shooting. Adolphus ambled away, all through the shot and shell.

More Art Needed In Fish Photography

More art is needed in fish photography.

That's the consensus of opinion of officials of the local Chamber of Commerce and the newly formed Bay of Quinte Tourist and Publicity Committee.

Scores of snapshots have been received at the local Chamber during the past week or so from Reeves and Deputy-Reeves of this county and individuals from throughout the section of interesting catches of fish, and scenic views followed a request made for them some time ago. Some of the best pictures will be used in an attractive little booklet being printed by the publicity committee for distribution among tourists to the district.

The majority of the snapshots of fish taken, while displaying excellent catches are invariably made with a poor background and show up very poorly in the snapshot. One of the hardest things to learn is to find one out of the scores sent in really fit for printing.

Fire Breaks Thru Windows Into House on Coleman Street

Starts In Shed And 'Catches On' To Window Frames

Fire which broke out from unknown cause in a woodshed at the rear of the premises of Mrs. J. L. Thrall at 223 Coleman Street, at 10.35 a.m. today spread to the framework of the windows of the kitchen and breaking the glass caused damage to building and contents. The blaze also spread to the south into an adjacent garage the property of Mr. George Whalen and scorched some of the outside woodwork of the kitchen. Damage was restricted to some hundreds of dollars.

Mrs. Miller a nearby resident first noticed the smoke pouring out of the shed and rising above the house. The alarm was quickly sent in.

Number 223 Coleman Street is occupied by Mr. Otto E. Sargent and Mr. Hedquest as tenants. Fire, water and smoke damage was caused both upstairs and downstairs in the rear portion of the house, to building and contents.

The fire due to the dryness of the wood had taken a good foothold in a short time and by time the fire department arrived on the scene it had spread through the shed and was eating its way through to the adjacent garage. Full water pressure was forced into play but the flames had taken such a start that they had spread into the rear of the brick dwelling and had broken through the windows.

The fire was soon checked at this point and the house and garage were saved from further damage. Considerable damage was done to to the frame woodshed, the beams and frame work being badly destroyed. The garage was scorched but not badly damaged, while the kitchen at 223 Coleman was flooded with water.

Mr. Douglas Whelan is occupant at 223 Coleman Street. Fire did not get into this house.

FRATERNITY SEEN IN SOCIAL MEET

21st Battalion Club Of Kingston Entertained By Club Here

One of the most striking exhibitions of fraternity and comradeship at men of this section was displayed last evening at Memorial Hall on the occasion of the get-together of the 2nd and 21st Battalion Clubs of this city, who were hosts to nearly fifty members of the 21st Battalion Club of Kingston. A perfect evening's entertainment was enjoyed by the local and Kingston Clubs.

Accompanying the 21st Battalion Club from Kingston were Lt.-Col. H. E. Pense, former O.C. of the Kingston unit and Major Kidd, better known as Padre Kidd, "of the 21st". Also present were Lt. Rutherford, V.C., M.C., of Colborne; Capt. Horace Vandervaeir; Col. G. O. Winterbottom, D.C.M., M.C., and one of the Peterborough Rangers; Padre, the Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne; President Alf. Tugwell of the Kingston 21st Battalion Club, and others.

As chairman of the evening, Garn Dobbs of this city, welcomed the guests and introduced the various speakers. Brief addresses were delivered by the distinguished visitors, these and interesting talk given by Padre Beauchamp Payne who dwelt chiefly upon events connected with the Jubilee year at King George and Queen Mary.

During the evening, assisting the many impromptu entertainers of the local and Kingston Clubs, the pipe Band of the Kingston 21st Battalion Club, which accompanied the members to the city provided an excellent musical program.

It is expected that in the near future the Kingston Club will be hosts to the combined Battalion clubs of this city at a gathering in that city.

SALVATION ARMY SELF-DENIAL

During the last two or three weeks the annual Self-Denial Campaign of the Salvation Army has been progressing in this city. The special lists have yielded good results, while the house-to-house canvass, was a little more difficult than was hoped for.

To-morrow, Saturday, the Tag Day finals will be held in the city and Adjutant Martin stated today that at least $150.00 must be raised tomorrow, if the objective of $750.00 is to be secured, the Army's need of the funds at this time is most vital.

It is hoped that citizens discern early desire to see the local Corps reach its objective, in recognition of the fact that the unfortunate who depend on the Army's ministrations look to the well-favoured, to maintain the various channels of Army Service.

Should any generous giver have been overlooked in the canvass, an immediate contact by call, telephone or mail with Adjutant Martin would be most sincerely appreciated.

The announcement of the campaign results will be made public in the Citadel on Monday evening.

POLICE COURT

A man giving his name as Alfred Lauchlan, Belleville, was arrested last night on a charge of the theft of tires. Lauchlan appeared in local police court held before Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., today but was not asked to plead as the offence is alleged by the Provincial Police to have been committed in Prince Edward County. The accused was remanded, in custody, until the 22nd of the month, when he along with Delbert Leichford, Thurlow, will jointly face charges of the theft of ten tires, when arraigned in the Picton police court. Both are being held without bail. The theft was committed in Ameliasburg Township.

Two inebriates and two motorists were assessed fines after their plea of guilty had been received. One of the drunks informed the court he was "slightly short on cash", the usual ten day sentence in default of payment of the fine was imposed.

Both motorists were deprived of their individual operator's license, one being charged with reckless driving while the second incur a more serious count, that of driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated. The latter was fined $15.00 and costs and given a six months' suspended sentence, during which time his driver's licence was cancelled. "The court intends to keep elevating the punishment on these drunken drivers until they are eliminated as they are a public menace and very dangerous on our streets and highways," stated Magistrate Butler with forcefulness today. A fairly profitable session in the matter of fines being paid, was in evidence and the city's coffers were enriched considerably. B. C. Donnan, K.C., local Crown Attorney, represented the prosecution of the cases.

DOUBLED UP WITH RHEUMATISM

Could Not Wash Himself Nor Brush His Hair

So bad was his rheumatism that his friends declared he would never work again. Although he is 76 years old, he proved they were wrong. Read what he says:—

"I am seventy-six years of age. Last Christmas I was completely doubled up with rheumatism. I could not wash myself nor brush my hair. My friends said I should never work again. I set myself to working harder than a young man to-day. Thanks, many thanks, to Kruschen Salts. I take them in my tea, and I have taken them for many years. I recommended them to a friend who could not get rid of gall by myself, nor sit up. But see me work now—12 hours a day sometimes. Kruschen Salts have done it." — G. ——.

Rheumatic conditions are the result of an excess of uric acid in the body. The six ingredients of Kruschen Salts have the power of dissolving uric acid crystals. These ingredients assist Nature to expel these dissolved crystals through the natural channels. In addition, there are still other salts in Kruschen which prevent fermentation in the intestines, and thereby check the further accumulation of uric acid, but not of other body poisons which undermine the health.

Session Legislation Passed Praised by W.E.Tummon M.P. At Conservative Meeting

lone for the people he serves."

The Marketing Act was described by Mr. Tummon as an Act which gives the Canadian farmer some control over the prices of the products which he grows. The Farmers' Creditors' Act: "Businessmen when they get too deeply in debt can declare themselves bankrupt and pay off so much on the dollar. How many of a farmer getting bankrupt?" asked the speaker. "No, when a farmer gets behind he loses all he has—all he has earned in his years of toil. This Act is to give him somewhat the same protection, that the businessman receives".

Within a few weeks the new Farm Loan Act will be instituted in Ontario, promised Mr. Tummon. This Act was passed in April and only waits the appointment of the Board and the machinery with which to carry it on. Under this Act the farmer may be materially assisted through the use or some ninety millions of dollars which will be made available through the fund set aside.

Designed for Jobless

The Unemployment Insurance Act, which the cabinet should have been passed long ago, in the boom years of 1928 to '29, and which was shot by the speaker to have been one of the planks in the platform of the Hon. Mackenzie King when he was elected in 1919 but, "was promptly forgotten when he got in office", is designed as an aid for the man, who is out of a job, but who is willing and unable to get another one. Had it been passed years ago, when conditions were better then a huge fund would have been steadily created, which, when times were so much to alleviate present day distressed, which is unemployment. Declared Mr. Tummon in summing up, "Never has there been such a such a courageous and sensible leader as the man, who at present guides the reins of this country, and never before have voters of this country been given such a choice between one common sense and good judgment and evil! He will be elected because this coming election", he concluded.

Mr. Tummon in his last remarks again called attention to the matter of making sure their names were on the list.

Cameron Praised By Bill

Mr. James Hill, M.P.P., for East Hastings, introduced by Mr. Fred Mitchell, Liberal leader of Thurlow Young People's Conservative Club, who held their regular meeting in Belleville recently, in addresses by Mr. Tummon, declared he was glad to see so many there and he wouldn't have to talk publicly for a while in the opening remarks. Mr. Hill paid high tribute to the qualities and ability of the Liberal candidate for South Hastings, whom the Conservatives would be called upon to beat at the coming election.

"He's a man, that no one can point a finger at. The Liberals have a candidate that we'll have to work hard to beat. They've been holding house to house meetings and have been canvassing throughout the city and country. Their organization is complete. The Liberal candidate has a nice enough man, but the principle he stands for are contrary to we can't vote for," warned Mr. Hill.

The election of last June will help the Conservatives cause, proposed the speaker. Premier Hepburn, he declared, "hasn't helped Ontario a bit, a good many have changed their times would be ended if a new government were put in. They wanted a change, but they found out that the change was not such a welcome change after all. Now they know the true condition of things."

The Hon. Mr. Bennett and Stevens will work together in the coming election and will carry the country, said Mr. Hill.

Bennett has tried in every way to fulfill his promises made, but he has been handicapped at every turn. Even the depression assisted Farrell. A pageant, "No Laurels on Their Brows" was portrayed by Mrs. S. J. Elliott (Mother); Mr. Roy Welbourne (father); Messrs. Gordon Green and Wesley Farrell (sons), and Misses Myrtle Green and Lola Heath (daughters). Several visitors and a large number of the congregation were in attendance at this service.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reagle and family, of Hoards, spent Mother's Day with Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Bine.

Mr. and Mrs. George Stone and daughter Marguerite were guests of her parents on Mother's Day.

Pte. Elias MacMullin spent Saturday in Belleville and visited his sister, Mrs. W. Kent.

DOUBLE WINNER

OMAHA

Winner of the Kentucky Derby and then the Preakness Stakes, William Woodward's Omaha has shown himself best of the year's crop of thoroughbreds now racing on the American turf. He duplicated the feat of his sire, Gallant Fox, in winning both classics—the first time a "repeat" victory has been registered.

in keeping him from doing the things he wanted to do. This, coupled with the lack of support from the Liberal element, has reacted greatly to his disadvantage, it was claimed.

Mr. Hill recounted for his hearers a story of a striking exhibition of loyalty in the riding of South Hastings discovered by him on the Monday marking the observance of the Silver Jubilee of King George and Queen Mary. Fully one thousand people from throughout the north country gathered in Carlow on that day in the village that was previously decorated for the occasion. Bunting and lights were strung from specially erected and decorated poles in the village. While adult, children and residents from throughout the territory gathered to pay their respects to the Crown. "There was something about that that struck me," declared Mr. Hill. "We need more of that in this country."

Likes Work of Whip

Mr. Hill closed his brief address with an interesting account of the manner in which legislation was being effected by the Provincial Cabinet while in session at Toronto.

"It's strenuous work being the Whip of the House, but I like it", he admitted.

Ex-Alderman Harold Armstrong of Thurlow in his brief address asked his hearers to consider some of the many problems which the Hon. R. Bennett is and has been faced with. "If Hepburn finds it hard to get Ontario out of the depression, it is time, when income has decreased and expenditures have undergone considerable increase."

Mr. Armstrong branded the closing of the Trade-Canada relief camps "a piece of political propaganda, thrown in the faces of the people of the province by a party, that is bound to win." "And they deserve to, if this is the sort of a laboring man," he added.

A. E. Ames, president of a company, pointed out the speaker, is one who makes a thorough investigation of the affairs of the company in which he has stock. A good citizen is one who thinks even when confronted with the task of voting for a party to carry on the affairs of his own country. "It has been a godsend, that we have had a man of the courage and ability o' the Hon. R. B. Bennett, who has stuck and will continue to guide us through."

"We've got to work hard; there is an element going around feeding people satray. They are trying to hand out gold bricks, but the came doesn't seem to have been working so well since the last provincial election", claimed Mr. Armstrong, coupling the statement with the further one, that the country must have a good business administration before there can be any prosperity in Canada in any degree.

Thurlow Reeve Heard

Reeve Wesley Gray, Thurlow saw fit to comment on a Conservative should not be elected in South Hastings, following a tribute paid to him by Mr. Tummon upon his being nominated to lead the party. Thurlow will give Mr. Tummon a good majority; we have more faith down yet," promised Reeve Gray.

Mr. Geo. Stokes gave his audience a few pointers on the matter of registrations for voters' lists and explained briefly some of the workings of the court of revision now sitting at various places in the riding. It was pointed out that each year hereafter, the list will be revised each year to keep it up to date.

Wm. McMahon, president of the Tyendinaga Young People's Club occupied the chair and called for reports from the various clubs in the riding. It was pointed out that the Tyendinaga Young People's Club ordered an interesting to all present, Charlie Lloyd, Dorothy Hopkins club and artist, then the complete organization work was being carried on in that section.

Following the address and in answer to a question asked by President Fred Wallace, Mr. Hill said that the Thurlow Club should carry on the regular meetings during the summer, it was decided, on motion of Mrs. Harrison, and seconded by James Bunnett, that the club function for one more month at least. It is expected to hold a garden party some time later in the summer.

Following refreshments served by the ladies in attendance, dancing to the strains of Chas. Coyer's orchestra was indulged in to an early hour. Several local entertainers assisted with musical and song during the early part of the evening.

POWER FROM TIDES

Scientists and business men are taking keen interest in the proposed scheme to develop power from the tides at Passamaquoddy Bay. Five hundred thousand horsepower is expected from this source. The question has been before the people for many years as the Fundy tides and the Bay provide one of the most prominent possible developments anywhere in the world. The rise and fall here reach a total of 27 feet twice a day.

There is a fight by the fishermen against the scheme on the ground that the lowering of the levels of the bay waters would ruin the fisheries. Further opposition to the measure on the ground is based on the ground that there is not a market for the power in that vicinity in Maine but an engineer contends that 68 per cent. of the power could be used by the establishments of proposed stainless steel and aluminum plants.

What part the Canadian fishing industry will take in the issue is not known but agitation is expected. At the moment $5,000,000 has been allocated, out of a five million dollar U.S. public works planned outlay, to build a dam on Passamaquoddy Bay.

WILD FOWL SITUATION IN U. S.

Dr. W. T. Hornaday of Stamford, Conn., who is known as America's leading naturalist, fears that extermination of wild ducks and geese is "nigh, even at the door." In a recent issues of Our Dumb Animals, appears a portion of a pamphlet by Dr. Hornaday in which he dates back the present situation in the United States thirty years to the appearance of those millions of 'fine automatic' and 'pump' shot-guns at amazingly low prices. Since then the game bird hunters of the United States have been engaged, he charges, in a wild orgy of game destruction.

"The killers have been egged on by the inventors and makers of those awful repeating shot-guns, by extra-powerful gun powder, by choke-boxes, magazine extension, the mask-blinds, the deadly automobiles and the wage-eager guides.

"And latterly, there have come the commercial club, the permanent gun-pit, the live decoy lure, and the baiting of shooting waters and lands with grain to lure hungry ducks and geese into shooting range so close that "it is impossible to miss."

"And believe me, the hand of big business, backed by $500,000,000 of capital, also has borne heavily upon the wild flocks. From the Canadian line to the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, the incoming flocks, from their breeding grounds in Canada, are bombarded from October 1 to January 1; and it is hell for the waterfowl."

"Some large measures of relief have been insistently demanded of our federal government, at the hands of Mr. Darling, Secretary Wallace and the President. And then, instead of the duck pond pot (in the neck) in the famous Duck Stamp Tax bill, of $1.00 per hunter. Those stamps have come on. We know how many men have been mean enough to hunt and kill drought-stricken and half-starved ducks! Surely the number doing so should be mighty small. We know, hunters are so interested in preserving their birds," etc.

"At the recent Game Conference, Chief Darling triumphantly announced that the number of tame duck hunters last year, as reported up to that date, was 504,000! Over half a million!"

THOSE LETTERS

A young English lord has just triumphed in a "breach of him" case brought by a well-known screen actress. The lord, who married, was accompanied to court by his wife who had to listen to love-letters written in a style which prompted the court to refer to certain passages as "vaporings". According to evidence submitted to the court the young man, then a plain "Mr.", was known as "boodles" and the girl was known as "feodles".

What the nobleman and his noble lady thought when these blush-creating epistles were read to a crowded court in which even the nobility occupied seats among the common folk may only be imagined. What young men throughout the world thought as they read passages in the news stories of the trial is naturally left unrecorded. And girls must have learned something from the letters read at the trial.

But it is safe to say that youth will still write letters with phrases of a peculiar kind dedicated to "friendship" or "love" whichever it is to be called. They make a feast of reading for the curious but not so pleasant to the person who wrote and the person written to, to hear read.

DAZZLED EYES

Some secret kept her happy,
Though much had gone amiss:
Her lips were always smiling,
Just ready for life's kiss!

I heard her singing softly
About her work each day;
I listened to her lilting,
So tender and so gay!

In vain I tried to fathom
Her nature, and to find
Just how she kept the gladness
And cast her cares from mind.

But she could only tell me:
"The joys are all so dear,
I love to name them over,
I love to hold them near!

"They are so bright and shining
I think they dazzle me,
Until their golden presence
Is all that I can see!"

"ADOPT A CHILD WEEK" is something new in the cycle of things important enough to have a whole week allotted to a particular cause. Many children have no homes, other than that provided through Children's Aid Societies; and the supply of children seems greater than the demand for adoption, hence publicity is called for as the universal remedy for things which need public attention. From present appearances many children will find good homes as a result of the publicity given through Adopt a Child Week, and many homes will be happier because of the beneficent influence of childhood and the satisfaction of doing good. Of course, the Ontario Government took the biggest bite of all and probably forestalled many ambitious individuals when they adopted the famous quintuplets of Callendar.

20 YEARS AGO

May 17th., 1915

The 39th. Regiment which is stationed here is divided into two bns; 500 at the barracks and 500 on Zwick's Island.

Mr. John Cornelius has gone to reside in Trenton.

30 Years Ago

May 17th., 1905

It looks like old times to see the building that is going on in the city this year. Not for a long time has there been so much employment for builders in Belleville.

One does not have to listen very hard these days to hear the "call of the wild". Vacation time is coming, and it fell like summer sure this morning.

Messrs. B. W. Vermilyea and W. F. Robinson left this morning for a few days' trout fishing in the northern part of the county where the speckled beauties are said to be abound.

The steamer Ella Ross brought a number of passengers to the city today from bay ports.

Mr. Arthur P. Northrup is home from Montreal, on a short visit.

Mr. Andrew Lloyd of Erie, Pa., is in the city on a visit. Mr. Lloyd is an old Belleville boy and will return here for the Old Boys' Reunion, accompanied by Mrs. Lloyd.

A brick block belonging to Mr. J. W. Pearce, M.P.P., was destroyed by fire at Marmora last evening. The block was occupied by Mr. Pearce, general merchant; the Marmora Herald printing office; Chas. McWilliams, merchant tailor; Wm. Sanderson, harnessmaker; John Shannon, dwelling. Part of the stocks was saved but Mr. Pearce's loss will be heavy.

40 Years Ago

Reports of slight damage from last night's frost have reached us.

The plague of dust today was felt all over town. The gale was a hummer.

May flowers are blooming.

A great many young people are taking morning exercises in row boats on the bay.

The old band stand on the hospital lot has been torn down to make room for the football club. The football has arrived and was used for the first time last evening.

At the Trenton dog show, Mr. Jas. Heasley's famous dog "Teaser" was awarded the special medal for the best black and tan terrier.

A pair of strolling musicians filled the air with melodious strains from bag pipes on Front Street today.

Mr. Bourne, late with Haines & Lockyer in this city, left for Ottawa, last night, to take charge of a branch boot and shoe store for a Montreal firm.

Mr. and Mrs. James Emsley, who have been spending the winter in Florida, returned to the city yesterday.

Letters to the Editor

Canniffton, May 14, 1935.

The Editor of Ontario Intelligencer:
Dear Sir,—

I noticed in today's issue that the milk producers selling milk to Belleville dealers urge that only pasteurized milk be sold in the city town. I must be plain, but I would just like to know why they should try to run the city's business. There are farmers selling good, clean milk in the city and I looked at one report with a bacteria count of 10,000. Will pasteurized milk show less? I understand a supply a small amount to one of them during the winter from an accredited herd. Why do these fellows selling milk regularly to the city dealers want to cut other farmers out of business? They evidently do not believe in the Golden Rule but want to cut the other fellow out so they can sell more milk. In short, they wish to bag the milk supply. Mighty few of these men have their cows T. B. tested. Hoping that they be willing to live and let live and let the city run its own affairs until asked for advice.

SOD-BUSTER.

PASTEURIZATION NOT WANTED

Belleville, May 14, 1935.

To the Editor, Ontario Intelligencer
Dear Sir,—

With your kind permission I would like to voice an opinion re the "Pasteurization of Milk and Cream Petition" which came up for sanction by the City Council and was referred back, and rightly so.

If I am not mistaken this is the same organization trying to railroad this through that called in the Milk Board and raised the price of milk to the consumer, said the old Council never raised one word of protest in the cause of the consumer. I am glad we have some men in this year's Council big enough to call a halt on this misleading act.

In regard to pasteurized milk and cream,—anyone desiring same can buy it now and anyone desiring raw milk can buy it, and that is as it should be. Why legislate for a few when the many must be considered as well? From one on the outside it looks to me as though this move is being made by the parties long owning pasteurizing equipment trying to squeeze the little fellows out who haven't got the pasteurizing equipment.

Again wishing to endorse the action of the men on the Council that stopped this "Miller" action.

Thanking Mr. Editor, for allowing me sufficient space in your paper to air these few thoughts,

PICKEREL LAW

The swirling waters of the Trent River, deep pools and lakes in the northern part of the county and even the Bay of Quinte, all had their quota of anglers yesterday out for the first pickerel fishing of the season. But catches were reported small. Even in the Trent River where the fish were reported fairly plentiful, but was evidently fished. One company of fishermen from the city displayed their lone fish, the result of nearly a whole day's angling.

The following are extracts taken from the Game and Fisheries laws governing the catching of pickerel in the Province of Ontario:

1. In the waters lying to the southward of and including Lake Nipissing and the French and Mattawa Rivers, no small fish, for catch or kill any yellow pickerel (pike-perch or dore) from the first day of April to the fifteenth day of May, both days inclusive.

2. No one shall fish for, catch or kill in any waters of the Province in any one day by angling a greater number than eight yellow pickerel regardless of their length, nor take away at any one time a greater number than two days' legal catch.

3. No person shall catch any pickerel from a moving or drifting boat or any other floating device in the Counties of Victoria, Peterborough, Northumberland and Durham; the waters of the Trent River and Lake Scugog in any county; the waters of Crow Lake and Crow River in the Counties of Peterborough and Hastings; and the waters of Beaver Creek, in the County of Hastings, during the close season for the taking of bass and maskinonge (muskellunge).

4. No pickerel shall be taken from an anchored boat, prior to July 1, in the waters mentioned in section 3, but one may artificial bait or lures. (Line bug spinner is an artificial bait.)

Rochester, Minn., May 17 (CP) —Here's a man chaun letter writers missed.

Herman Block, farmer resident at Flint Island near here, walked into a Rochester Motor Sales Company and set down on the counter three coffee cans full of dimes.

"I want that truck," he said, pointing to a used model with a $500 price tag on it. "Here's the money."

The entire sales force of the company started to work. An hour and 15 minutes later they announced the cans contained 4,410 dimes! $50 completed the deal. Block said he had saved the dimes over a period of four years.

PARKING OF CARS ON FRONT STREET IS UNDER FIRE

Improvement of Rear Property Favored By Guest

BUSINESS BETTER

Secretary Manager of Commerce Chamber Reports

The motor car problem received consideration at the regular meeting of the directors of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce at their regular weekly meeting on Thursday. It was the opinion of the directors that some scheme should be adopted to relieve the congestion of cars along the city's main business street, Mr. Fred Hamilton, who was a guest at the meeting, advocated a thorough survey of the south side of the river with the idea in mind of adopting a combination street plan and parking space. He advised entering upon the scheme gradually and only after it had been approved as a relief measure. The result of the plan would be the eventual improvement of the rear property, the provision of adequate parking space and convenient unloading facilities for large transports, while at the present time very often encounter great difficulty in making delivery of goods to business places along the street, and in doing so are often compelled to block traffic. Further consideration will be given by the directors to this matter as a future meeting.

Mr. J. O. Herity, the secretary-manager, gave a very interesting report on his recent visit to industrial centres in the eastern United States, which was one of the most encouraging trips made by him as Industrial Commissioner. Business conditions in many places he found to be vitally improved over a year ago. Many stores on secondary business streets in principal cities which have long been vacant, Mr. Herity said, are now occupied and as a general indication of business improvement in the United States he cited the following facts and figures: Montgomery Ward last month had the largest April sales in its history, 22.8 per cent over April of 1934, and Sears Roebuck sales for the four weeks ending April 27rd, were 23.1 per cent over the same 1934 period. S. S. Kresge sales in April were 13.3 per cent higher than in 1934, and Woolworth sales were 13.1 per cent higher in April this year than last. It is interesting to that Easter was later this year than last, making the comparison unbalanced, the sales for the entire first quarter are cited. Montgomery Ward's first quarter sales were 21 3-10 per cent higher this year than last, and in the twelve weeks ended April 23rd, Sears Roebuck sales were 25.7 per cent higher this year.

Earnings Advance

Coca-Cola earnings for the first quarter this year were 36 per cent ahead of the first three months of last year, National Cash Register, which sells to all classes of business and industry, showed orders in April 24.1 per cent over April of 1934 and 19.2 per cent higher in the first four months of this year than in 1934. Sales of General Motors cars in April and also for the first four months of this year were the largest for those periods since 1929. Sales to consumers in the United States were 242,500 cars in April, against 196,549 cars in April 1934. For the first four months of this year the sales were 903,022 cars and for the first four months of 1934 they were 726,873. Figures issued by the company showed that sales of General Motors cars to dealers in the United States and Canada, together with shipments overseas, totalled 184,059 in April, a gain of more than 30,000 over April of 1934, when the total was 153,954. The total of such sales in the four months from January through April was 577,775 cars this year, against 470,858 in the corresponding period of 1934. These facts and figures indicate that better times are on the way.

Those present at the meeting were the President, Mr. J. B. Boyce and Messrs. F. P. Bernstein, Leo B. Riggs, H. W. Ackerman, W. C. Springer, W. R. Morton, Macdonald Robertson and the secretary-manager, Mr. J. O. Herity.

CITY POPULATION SHIFTING LITTLE

Little May Moving is Reported for This Year

That period of the first two weeks in May proverbially dedicated to the annual migration of families from one home to another in the city was not a productive one this season for moving firms or real estate companies, it was reported today.

Leases and rents, it was pointed out, generally begin and end on May 1st, but even this date failed to provide any business worth mentioning. In past years many families were regular customers of different firms, hunting out a new home and moving their effects in the spring as regularly as the robins arrive. But this year even the old die-hards are staying put and are settling down to a steadier and more normal existence.

At the local office of the Bell Telephone Company it was reported by Manager G. W. Proctor the number of transfers and installation of telephones from one home to another was practically nil this season.

Real estate firms report several families arriving in the city during the past winter and leasing or renting commodious homes. Business has been fairly good, it was added. The majority of formerly vacant homes have been filled and fewer empty residences than last year are noted.

Next to May, August is the second busiest month for the moving firms. No explanation of this is attempted, however, by veterans of the game. "It just happens that way, that's all," they comment.

CLASS ORGANIZES

A very pleasing event in connection with the Mother's Day Service was the organizing of the Young People's Class in the Sunday School.

Immediately after the service the pastor, Rev. Mr. Johnston, asked the young people to remain. They had previously asked for a class of their own. They expressed their desire to form a part of Scott's Sabbath School in the form of an organized class. The following officers were elected—President, Colin Donald; secretary, Miss Chas. Carr; Treasurer, Andy Donald.

They chose as their teacher Mrs. Morley Sine.

They have still to secure a number for their class and have the membership written up before they can have their class registered.

BUYERS THRONG AT ROY AUCTION

Study In Human Nature And In Auctioneer's Art

Larger than any seller anything recently held in this city, the sale of effects of the late James A. Roy held at his former residence, Victoria Avenue, was attended by hundreds of local and out-of-town buyers. So successful was the event and so numerous the articles offered that it was continued for two days.

While scores of cars lined the roads and streets bordering the large estate, hundreds crowded the spacious grounds as the effects were placed one by one under the auctioneer's hammer.

There was the sonorous intonation of the auctioneer's voice as each piece was put up for inspection for the eager buyers, rubbing shoulders to see. There was the brush as the first few bids commenced, and then the there purring noises as bidding progressed. Under the prompting of the auctioneer bids seemed from one to two dollars, then to five and finally to ten.

"Any more, ladies and gentlemen?..... Who'll say eleven.... eleven..... eleven...." interminably the prompting continues.

An elderly lady edges forward and inspects the offering carefully. "Twelve dollars," she bids. Again the prompting continues. Finally the article is knocked down to an aggressive buyer in the front.

A large table is pulled forth for inspection of the crowd. Its carved legs and massive shape attract the eye of several dealers.

"What am I offered, just for a start?" asks the auctioneer.

"Five cents!" comes a wag in the front row. A moment's pause. Then an out-of-town buyer, a dealer who recognizes value, offers twenty dollars. Slowly at times, more briskly at other times, the bidding continues again. The table is finally sold to the highest bidder for some thirty dollars, deliver it yourself.

Smaller pieces of bric-a-brac, pictures, vases, all were inspected and then offered. Ceaselessly the auctioneer's hammer waves and motions and pounds. A nod here, a gesture there, a voice now and then all mark the bids as the articles are disposed of. And, patiently awaiting are the trucks and even horse-drawn drays ready to claim and take away the articles as fast as purchased and paid for.

During the afternoon yesterday many interior effects of the fine large home were offered for sale.

ALUMNAE FETE 1935 GRADUATES

The Alumnae of the Belleville General Hospital entertained at dinner at the Hotel Quinte last night in honor of the graduating class of 1935. Receiving with President Miss Edith Wright were Miss Florence McIndoo, Superintendent of Belleville General Hospital and Miss Florence Fitzgerald, President of District 6, R.N.A.O.

The tables were prettily decorated with roses and carnations while each member of the graduating class received a corsage of sweet peas and baby's breath. After the toast to His Majesty the King, proposed by Miss Wright and blessing by Miss Soutar, the sumptuous dinner was enjoyed by all present.

This was followed by a splendid program consisting of the President's address, vocal solo by Miss McIndoo in her usual splendid style, Dr. Connor then gave a very interesting address full of humour, pathos and sound advice, before proposing the toast to the graduating class. Miss Marjorie Cornish responded. Miss Pearl Hamilton gave a most enjoyable reading entitled a humorous skit, "Twenty Years Hence" by Miss Laura Thompson. Miss Florence Fitzgerald introduced the next speaker, Miss Elizabeth Kaufman. Miss Kaufman in a well chosen address spoke of the changes that are coming in the nursing profession and the high standard required of the nurses of today.

There is no higher calling," said Miss Kaufman, "and we are sure this graduating class will measure up to the best of their ability."

This is the first Alumnae dinner given the graduating class and it is to be hoped that it will becomes an annual event.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"Cigolette"

Your Name in the Social Register and Your Pictures on the Society Page May Prove a Definite Handicap when you are suddenly confronted with the necessity of finding a job and being self-supporting. Such is the experience of well-born Kay Parrish, lovely heroine of "Cigolette," portrayed by Adrienne Ames at the Capitol Theatre, when she tried to trade blue book publicity for three meals a day and a roof over her head.

When Kay is left penniless by a suicide father, she packs up her bag to join the unemployed ranks of New York. Friends and employment agencies find her blue blood classification a detriment, since there is every advertising value in it. There are hundreds of humbler applicants—and one of them gets the job.

Impossible, Kay looks up Terry Gallagher, night club proprietor who befriended her at a charity bazaar. She accepts his job offer as hostess in his Rue-Haw Club, and here begins the interesting and entertaining romance between Kay Parrish, erstwhile debutante and Terry, ex-convict. Entertainment in a cheap cabaret, and Greg Ennerson, the penniless mountain graduate, Kay's refinement and decency.

"Cigolette" introduces the youthful theme song written for the screen through Milton Douglas and his orchestra, who appear in new and night club sequences of the picture.

Spite of Danger

Driving a cargo of death, in a race against time, with love and money the stakes, Richard Talmadge pilots a huge five-ton Diesel truck down the perilous mountain grades in the exciting drama, "In Spite of Danger" which has Marian Marsh in the leading feminine role and provides the second attraction on this same programme.

The picture tells of the struggles of an ex-race track driver who finds himself, after an accident, unfit to return to the 130-mile clip of the speedway. Turning to another field to earn his livelihood, he gets a job driving a transport truck between cities. He finally wins a contract to carry dynamite.

Most of the picture was filmed on the Angeles Crest highway, one of Southern California's most scenic mountain roads leading to the famous Mt. Wilson observatory. It was over this road that the race between Wallace Ford and Arthur Stehl took place, a test run between two heavy trucks, hurtling along at 100 miles an hour over roads that drop into deep canyons.

Charlie Grapewin is cast as the father of Marian Marsh, while Arthur Hohl portrays the villainous business competitor and rival of Wallace Ford for the hand of lovely Marsh. Charles Middleton, Edward Le Saint, Richard Wessel and Jay Ward are included in the supporting cast.

Capitol News Reel will be shown for each performance.

AT THE REGENT

"Sweet Music"

Valles Scores Smashing Hit in Big Film Musical

Rudy Vallee is coming to the Belle Theatre. He will have with him not only his own famous Connecticut Yankees, but the Frank and Milton band of insurrument wreckers. He will be assisted by charming Ann Dvorak, youthful screen star, who has turned "hoofer" for the occasion, as well as Helen Morgan, greatest of torch singers, Ned Sparks, Robert Armstrong, Allen Jenkins, Alice White, Joe Cawthorn and Al Shean who was Mr. Gallagher's partner not so many years ago.

They'll all be there, with scores of other well known players, in Rudy Vallee's greatest film triumph, "Sweet Music", produced as only Warner Bros. who created film history can make them.

"Sweet Music", which is even better, and bigger, than it sounds, will open at the Belle Theatre, tomorrow (Saturday) with a matinee daily.

Based on Jerry Wald's story which is said to be stranger in plot, more romantic and more hilariously funny even than "Twenty Million Broken hearts", it parallels Vallee's own career insofar as the professional side is concerned.

He has the role of a college youth who has organized a band from among his fellows. They turn professional and make a tremendous hit over the radio and at night clubs. He falls in love with a beautiful dancing girl who thinks she hates him because he is constantly taunting her about her act, and who, after spurning his love, suddenly awakens to the fact that it is to this young crooner that she owes all her engagements.

Ann Dvorak has the role of the dancer with Ned Sparks as her manager who makes her believe that he is responsible for the contracts which Vallee has secured for her. Helen Morgan plays herself, a torch singer and Allen Jenkins a dumb publicity agent who gets all press notices for himself instead of Vallee, the man who is paying him.

Novel dances and specialty numbers, in which lovers of beautiful girls take part, were staged by Bobby Connolly, Impressive settings for these dances include a streamline train in which Ann Dvorak leads a group of talented dancers, two cabarets and a big stage performance.

Vallee will sing six songs, written especially for the production by three famous song writing teams, Warren and Dubin, Fain and Kahal and Dixon and Wrubel.

Another of these popular "Thrills of Youth' comedies, this one appropriately titled "Getting Dad" and the Belle Latest News Flashes will be exhibited on the same programme.

One of the screen's most unusual and interesting "actors" is Rex, King of the Wild Horses, star of many screen productions, and co-star with Tim-Tim Jr. Anyone wonder dog in the new twelve chapter serial drama "The Law of the Wild" starting at the Belle Saturday matinee. Rex and featuring Bob Custer, lovely Lucile Brown and funny Rex Turpin. Every boy and girl should see this great picture.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, May 17 (CP)—Smelters' ties to better than 190 set a new top since the spring of 1931. Heavy advances occurred in Dominion Tar issues and there were minor gains for Building Products and Canada Tracks. In the Steels, Page-Hersey, United Steel, Steel of Canada, National Steel Car and General Steel Wares closed higher.

In brewery and distillery group higher prices were registered.

Consolidated Bakeries featured the Stocks, advancing to 9 for a gain of more than a point. It slipped a little before the close. Packers and Loblaw "A" also had small gains.

Metal and Mines spurted, the industrial list today with Consolidated Smelters selling above 180, up 8 points for the day to its best price in more than a year while International Nickel added ¼ to sell at 39¼. The whole market was up in the early afternoon but trading slowed.

Walkers Common advanced a point, Distillers Seagrams ¾ and Canadian Breweries ½ in trading activity. The oils were slightly less firm than in recent sessions, International Petroleum selling back a half point to 28 and Imperial down ¼ to 20¾. Steel, Construction, Utility and Implement stocks pushed into new high ground.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, May 17—(AP)—Profit taking became considerable today particularly in today's stock market, although the steels, utilities and mines continued to show strength. The trading volume, under that of yesterday, was still ahead of recent sessions.

Gainers of fractions to a point or more included U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, American Telephone, Western Union, R. C. Smelting, Alaska Juneau, Anaconda and Westinghouse. Declines of ½ to around 2 were recorded by Allied Chemical, International Business Machines, Corn Products and Union Carbide. The oils were steady. The late tone was mixed. Transfers approximated 1,700,000 shares.

TORONTO MINES CLOSE

Toronto, May 17 (CP)—The British, Canada gold leaders, Moneta and Bralorne, were definitely weak, the former selling off to 9¾ for a loss of 30 points. Pioneer off 45 cents to $11.00. Hollinger dropped about 10 cents to $15.50.

Sherritt in the Base Metals touched $1.00 before moving off slightly to show a net gain of around 10 cents. Sudbury Basin pulled up a few cents to $1.53, and gained at about 25 cents each were recorded for Noranda and Hudson Bay.

The silvers were off a little during the morning but moved in the afternoon to close on top.

Action on the mining board today centered in the industrial stocks, inspired by higher quotations for copper, base and since on the London market. Noranda sold up to $41.00, Hudson Bay to $14.00, Sherritt Gordon to 94, Coast Copper to $3 and Falconbridge to $3.96. Silvers were also steadier and the golds irregular.

A sag for bar silver on the London market gave the silvers a poor start and Eldorado, Nipissing Premier, Castle and Bear all weakened a few cents each but the losses were more than made up on heavier trading after the New York commercial price was posted showing a gain of half a cent for bar silver.

Lake Shore was outstanding in the golds, trading actively up to $58.35. In the old Texas-Canadian was the leader for volume with a gain of 6 cents showing.

CUT SCREEN DOOR TO STEAL PIES
Lunch Room In City Entered During Night
Robbers mysteriously gained entrance to the office of the Greenleaf Co., Station Street, during the night and removed 70 Canadian coppers from the cash register. Nothing else was reported missing when the police were notified.
Robbers, who was apparently hungry, cut a whole in the screen door at the New Service Lunch early today and stole a number of pies, here again nothing else was reported missing.
Police Inspector Mcintosh reported missing articles from their respective automobiles last night, one taxi a steamer rug, while the radiator cap of the other vehicle was removed in the owner's absence.
A slight motor accident occurred on Station Street shortly before noon today when a truck driven by Floyd Woods, 82 Station Street, collided with a parked motor car. The vehicles were parked alongside of each other on Front Street. Woods in backing the truck just slightly damaged the fender of the motor car.

SISTER WERNERA IS SENTENCED
Five Year Term and a Heavy Fine Imposed over Exchange
Berlin, May 17.—Sister Wernera was today sentenced to five years for infraction of Exchange regulations, dodge Herman Jordan, presiding, also fined the nun 140,000 marks and decreed that she lose citizenship rights during the next five years. If she cannot pay the fine, she must spend an additional 14 months in prison.
No reinstate the Reich for the 252,000 marks she admitted smuggling out of the country, an equal amount will be collected from Vincentine order.
Sister Wernera, first of more than fifty nuns to face trial for Exchange violations, told the court she was familiar with the laws governing Foreign Exchange.
Smuggling was easy for her, however, she explained, since no one searched her when she crossed the frontier.
The funds she smuggled out allegedly went first to the order's branch in Belgium and thence to the Netherlands where they were changed into florins One-third was used to amortize an American loan said to have been secured at St. Louis, Mo., the state attorney charged, while the other two-thirds were invested.

Germans Build 450 Speed Boats

(Copyright 1935 By The Associated Press)

Berlin, May 17—A new, compact speed boat manned by only five marines and carrying four torpedoes has been perfected by German naval engineers, foreign military attaches here said today. It was asserted 450 of these miniature naval weapons have already been built.

The speed boat, said to be capable of speed up to 60 knots, needs only one man to operate it. Each member of the rest of the crew takes charge of one torpedo.

PICTON MASONS WELCOME D.D.G.M.
History Of Grand Lodge Given by Rt. Wor. Bro. W. C. Mikel
The Picton Masonic Lodge room was crowded last night to overflowing on the occasion of the official visit of Rt. Wor. Bro. W. C. Mikel, D.D.G.M. Visiting brethren were present from Napanee, Bloomfield, Consecon, Belleville and other points.
After the inspection was over the members adjourned to a banquet in the Parish Hall of the Anglican Church.
During the evening vocal and instrumental music was rendered and addresses given by Rt. Wor. Bro. J. O. Herity, Rt. Wor. Bro. J. W. Barlow, Wor. Bro. Dr. Morden, Wor. Bro. Fred Ward, K.C., and others.
The D.D.G.M. in responding to the toast to Grand Lodge said,—
History of Grand Lodge
The Grand Lodge of Canada in Ontario was established in 1858. In considering an individual or an organization it is always interesting to refer to earlier conditions. In 1792 William Jarvis was appointed Provincial Grand Master for Upper Canada. He was succeeded by Simon McGillivray, later by Colonel James Pinhorn, who was later succeeded by Sir Allan McNabb.
The Grand Lodge of England was formed in 1717. Prior to this a number of private or separate lodges came into existence from time to time, the origin of which is wrapped in uncertainty. Some have considered that the social guilds were their origin owing perhaps to the similarity of initiations and general conduct. Those who take the ground that the British people are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel conclude that the Masonic Lodges were deascended from the operative organizations that existed during the building of King Solomon's Temple, thirty centuries ago, and as these Lost Ten Tribes spread over Europe, they carried with them the germs of Masonry."
The Temple of King Solomon originated by his father, King David, occupied some 30 years on Mount Moriah in Jerusalem. Authorities tell us that it took about 30 years in assembling material and construction with 80,000 workmen employed in preparing material, 70,000 persons acting as burden bearers, and 30,000 workmen engaged in the temple, the whole in charge of 3,000 masters.
In those days the facilities for keeping records were limited.
Temple Destroyed
The Temple was destroyed by the Chaldeans, and later restored by Zerubbabel, the prince of the People, and again destroyed by the Romans, and after a succession of troubles all that is left of the Temple is said to be the Mosque of Omar.
The original edifice is said to have had a capacity of 300,000 persons. The destruction of this beautiful edifice reminds us of the weakness and uncertainty of the material things. The faded purple of Tyre, the ruins of ancient Rome, ancient Greece and Carthage, and the moldering temples of Venice form other reminders, but the immortal, the true and the intellectual influences continue.
At no time in the history of the world has the Temple of King Solomon exerted so great an influence as in the present time. The material conditions of ancient Greece has disappeared. If we consider the subtlety of disquisition, the force of imagination and the perfect symmetry and elegance of expression that characterized the great works of ancient Greece we must pronounce them intrinsically very valuable, but what shall we say when we find that from these have sprung all the noblest works of art and purest intellect. The vast accomplishments and brilliant fancy of Cicero, the eloquence of Demosthenes, the humour of Cervantes, the wit of Butler, the correctness of Bacon, the supreme and universal excellence of Shakespeare.
Masonic Influence Felt
Wherever a few great minds have left their stamp, truth and love, justice against prejudice and power, there has been the intellectual influence of universal liberty, and through twenty centuries her influences have been felt in the great movements, on the battlefields, in the schools of philosophy and religion.
When some of those nations, that have steadied the pressure and have justice against prejudice and power, there has been the intellectual influence of universal liberty, and through twenty centuries her influences have been felt in the great movements, on the battlefields, in the schools of philosophy and religion.

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper ma said to pop, Well Wilyum I must say you look comfortable.

Appearances in this case are not deceiving, pop said.

Meening he actually was, and ma said, Then in that case I wont even suggest going to the movies.

That's very considerate of you and also reveals exceptional farsightedness and a commendable resignation to fate, pop said.

Proberly meening it wouldn't be any use even if she did suggest it, and he started to read his paper and ma started to read hern, saving, My my, just look at the list of death notices.

Look at the berths, there's more of a future in them, I meen of course speeking in a mortial way, pop said, and ma said, Deer deer, so many of them seemed to of died so young, now for instance just to take a few of them alfabetically, Matilda Artcenaly, in her 42nd year, Bertram Bullick, in his 79th year, Henrietta Clover, in her 46th year, Geeserik Dulling, in his 46th year.

That'll do, that'll give me an idear, for Peet sake, pop said, and ma said, My, just imagine, Wilyum dear, they were all proberly people just like us.

Ony differnt that's enough about them pop said and ma said, But what I meen is you can just imagine them sitting in their private homes discussing whether to go to a movie or not, and it suddenly seems they not ony didn't see the movie but they never even got attother chance to make up their minds, you can just imagine them.

I can not and I refuse to try, pop said, blankit no blames, pop said, and ma said, And the list goes rite on. O deer, hardly one passed 60, listen to a few.

Are we going to the movies or aren't we? pop said, and ma said, Why Wilyum of course if you axually feel inspired that way, why didn't you say so?

And she hurry up went to put her hat on singing to herself happy.

TANGLED LIVES

By ANN FORESTER

Joyce was sitting cross legged on the other bed. Her hair was ruffled, her eyes were large and dark with sleep. Above the incongruous flannel gown her face was calm and lovely. She looked, in the cold light of the window, like some lovely and innocent child, thought Kitty, decretely worshipping beauty even while she affected to despise and discount it. Kitty Dawson felt her impulsive Irish heart go out to the girl.

"Sure, Nanny Fields, That's who she was when I knew her. We were kids together —Oh, it's the truth!" in answer to the girl's involuntary look of surprise. "You'd never have guessed we were the same age, would you? Even to a month. I remember my mother giving a birthday party for us both when we were nine. A lovely little thing she was even then —sparkling black eyes an' long black curls, I was drab brown and Nadine's curls used to pretty near break my heart."

Kitty chuckled and puffed contentedly on her cigarette.

Joyce laughed, too, a shaky little laugh which left tears in her eyes. Good to be here with Kitty—sharing the wholesome atmosphere she radiated wherever she happened to be. Good to confide in Kitty, as though she had known her all her life. . . .

She told of the drab, overworked childhood. Told of the heartburnings she had known over Norman, and even as she spoke Joyce was surprised to find there was none of the old bitterness left in her heart about Norman. There was merely an ache of desolation, as one might feel in finding a beautiful dream was not true.

She told of that hot afternoon when she had talked to old Roger Cameron and decided to leave Riverton.

Kitty removed the cigarette from her lips and burst into wrath. "Sure, he wouldn't help you himself! He just shoved you out into the world—a beautiful, inexperienced kid. Oh, those old fools make me sick!"

"But he was right, Kitty," Joyce said earnestly. "There was no chance for me to rise in Riverton. And if I got in a mess here—that was my own fault. But now . . . Oh, I have a fresh start. You've put fresh heart in me, I—I'm so happy today—" And to prove how happy she was, Joyce burst into tears, and flung her tear face down on the pillow.

Instantly Kitty was over there, brooding over her as her own mother might have done. "There . . . there . . . Poor kid. Poor little strained kid . Never mind, Kitty's going to take care of you. . . .

As good as her word, Kitty went to Nadine's apartment for Joyce's things and came back with her eyes snapping blue fire.

Kept in bed by lack of raiment (one can scarcely wear a muddy white satin evening dress in the daytime) Joyce gathered that there had been a considerable scene between the two women. She gathered as well that Kitty had undoubtedly enjoyed it. She apparently reflected on it at times with much satisfaction though all she would say was "I smacked her chops, there me!"

Beyond all doubt Kitty had planned in the shabby handbag she toticed the little money it contained, for when she returned she plunged at once into the subject of clothes.

"Want to get on here as a professional Joyce? Nursing's hard and trying work but—well, I like it. Are you afraid of hard work?"

At Joyce's eager reply Kitty thoughtfully scrutinized her face and nodded. "I'll get old King talked into taking you on . . . I'm the girl can turn the trick!"

And just so sastly had the kaleidoscope fallen into new and strange patterns. Hospital blue and white and grey . . . days and nights a matter of study and diet kitchens, nursing charts and linen counting. Days of hard work. Nights of broken rest.

In some ways it recalled the old hard grind of the Commercial House. There were nights when Joyce cried silently over her aching feet. Times when she smarted under unjust blame from cranky head nurses.

She grew weary of evading unwelcome attentions from some of the doctors and interns. She hailed the rise in the chill of winter dawns, to hear the rain splashing in the court where her room faced. To wash in cold water and creep shivering into the cold halls—the Central was not hospital and lacked many modern conveniences.

Joyce remembered her boast to Maddy—that she wanted beautiful things for her own. A grim little smile played around her young mouth. Beautiful things! Blue chambray uniforms starched to a most unpleasant coldness these wintry mornings. A heavy cloth coat —which she was buying on the instalment plan. Two hats, one black linden behind an old sheet to protect it, the white satin dress which she had had cleaned, and which she had never worn again.

A life as clean and uninteresting as a white china plate! thought Joyce rebelliously. The simile was suggested by her task at the moment —she was in the diet kitchen preparing trays.

But she had forgotten the kaleidoscope of life. It had held the blue and white and grey long enough . . . it was preparing to fall into new and colorful and arresting patterns.

NUMBER 368

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

The grey winter . . . . That was what Joyce came to call it when she looked back upon this time. She could see her eyes later, and by the very action, conjure the grim grey pile of masonry standing in slanting grey rain.

Rain. It seemed, looking back upon it, to have been always raining. Getting up in the morning, looking out on the chill court with the dimpling puddles. Hearing the rain dashing against the windows all day. Or worst of all, hearing the steady drumming of the rain through the long night watches.

Not even flowers could brighten the eternal greyness of the hospital. Joyce thought as she put the endless bouquets into water for the patients. The perfect waxen beauty of these florist flowers stressed artificiality. Nothing hideous and colorful about them. These long stemmed roses—the perfect white and yellow chrysanthemums, surely they didn't grow in the wind and the sun like other flowers, they were languid beauties forced into bloom for the house of pain.

Pain . . . that was the keynote of it all. It was the pain she saw all around her that was wringing the girl's heart, making her white and thin—painting violet shadows under her eyes.

Joyce was not fitted by nature to be a nurse. Her very sympathy told against her. She could not take the calm, detached, competent view-point of the trained nurse. A patient was never a "malaria case" or "concussion" to Joyce. He or she was a human being feeling pain—and thereby causing her vicarious pain as well.

Her sympathetic imagination laid her open to frequent rebukes from the head nurse. Susan Morrow had no sentimental nonsense about her. A patient was only a human being suffering from a disease—the human part far less interesting to Miss Morrow than the disease. She was eternally nagging at Joyce for "spoiling" the patients. A nurse must be brisk—efficient — putting painful pasts above the troublesome human element.

But Joyce could not be brisk and efficient with poor old Mrs. Connelly who did not know—though all the doctors and the nurses did, that she was never going to get well. Even crazed old Mrs. Marshall, who insisted on getting out of bed and walking home, could always get Joyce's sympathetic attention though the other nurses refused to answer the call bell when she rang.

The climax came on a day which ended a week of rain. To Joyce, preparing to go on night duty, it seemed as though there was no beauty or comfort in the world. There was nothing but long care corridors, tired feet, eternal call lights over ward doors.

Joyce was standing before the white bureau in her room, struggling into a clean starched uniform. As her hands closed smarting over the crackling blue chambray she found herself thinking of Nadine. Nadine, beyond all doubt, was at that moment stretched out on the day bed, swathed in perfumed chiffon—else dining at some expensive cafe with Ken Dane.

Joyce thought of the white satin dress hanging unworn in the closet —she thought of Jeff Therrold and she laughed, a laugh that turned into a dreary little croak.

"They put people in asylums for doing that!" said Kitty's voice behind her a trifle tartly.

Kitty, too, was dashing in to change to a fresh uniform. Joyce looked at her. Something disturbing about Kitty tonight. . . She tried to avoid meeting Joyce's eyes. Two angry red spots burned on Kitty's cheeks and her blue eyes were snapping.

"It's that Morrow . . . Honest, that woman makes my soul! For two pins tonight I'd resign and walk out of here—a body can only stand so much, and she'll find some of these days she's shoved me too far!" she finished darkly.

Joyce listened to her woes sympathetically. Joyce had made a discovery. Kitty had a tender admiration for Doctor Morton—one of the staff physicians, a handsome, rather pompous man of 50. It was a secret and modest passion which asked nothing further than to be allowed to work on her idol's cases. But even this small boon was denied poor Kitty.

"Takes me off Morton's case, she does —" said Kitty with flashing eyes —"and puts me on 305—a crabby old paralytic—one of Roger's cases. And simply because she's so crazy about Morton herself she's jealous of anyone he gives a bit of praise to!"

Kitty pulled a button so viciously it flew off.

"She lies in wait for him in the lower hall just so she can talk to him when he comes in!" Kitty went on in a tirade, "running up an' sayin' him the simplest questions, a child would know answer to, Layin' the blame on me because the bandage wasn't changed—when it was herself told me to let it go. For two pins I'd clear out of here an' go to scrubbing somebody's kitchen floor—that's the—the—what is it An' now I got to go up and take car of that crabby old devil in 302. Why—what's the matter, Joyce?" Kitty broke off in consternation as she caught sight of the girl's face. "You've been crying!" she exclaimed accusingly, whirling her around to face the grey light slanting in the window.

One of the features of the show is the return to a local ring of Al Dunlop in the main bout, while the Kiwanis Club he would officiate.

Veteran Hurler of Dodgers Allows Only Two Runs in Last Three Games Pitched Tom Zachary Scores Shutout Over Pirates In 13 Frames

TIGERS CLIMB

Earn Fifth Place Tie With Senators By Their Win

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, JR.

Look down the list of Brooklyn's pitchers and among the most depressing of the names you'll find one Jonathan Thompson Zachary, who has been known as "Old" Tom for so long some fans can hardly believe he ever was a youngster.

Making his first appearance in the majors with the Athletics back in 1918, Zachary has played with six clubs in the two circuits, pitched in three world series and has been cast-adrift so often he's quite accustomed to having his name on the waiver list. The Yankees cut him loose in 1928 and he wound up in the old National League at Boston. The Braves shunted him to Brooklyn last season and there he stayed this year, and losing six for the Dodgers, he's started the 1935 campaign with a record that plenty of youngsters might envy.

In his last three appearances "Old" Tom has allowed just two runs in 31 innings. He dropped a 1-0 decision to Pittsburg and Cy Blanton on a home run, trimmed the Reds 5-1 and finally shut out the Pirates yesterday, 2-0 in a 13-inning pound duel with Waite Hoyt, who has an equally long record.

Hoyt apparently had the better of the argument up to the last inning of the overtime duel that opened the Buccos' home stand against the rest. He escaped serious trouble while Zachary had to pitch his way out of a first-inning jam and allowed only nine hits over the long route. But in the 13th Arky Vaughan fumbled Pittsburg's pinch-hit grounder, Manager Hoyt and Jim Bucher followed with a pair of singles to break the deadlock and after Tony Cuccinello had drawn a walk, Dan Taylor's single brought in the ninth run.

The triumph in the only game on the National League Schedule left the Dodgers just one game behind the league-leading New York Giants.

American League.

In the American League, where two games were carried, the Yankees took a former hold on fourth by trimming the second-place Indians their first shutout of the season 10-0 and the Tigers advanced to a fifth-place tie with Washington by trimming the Senators 7-2.

Manager Joe McCarthy, recovering from an influenza attack which forced him to miss the Yanks' western tour, got back on the bench in time to see Vito Tamulis, rookie southpaw, scatter seven hits nicely to administer the whitewashing and the New Yorkers land on Willis Hudlin and two successors with a concentrated fifteen-hit attack.

Six Washington errors played a big part in Detroit's downfall and as the Tigers came through with timely blows while Tommy Bridges was holding the Senators to a lone shutout up to the final inning. Only the last two Detroit runs were scored without the aid of Senator misplays.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Yesterday afternoon the pupils of the high school department of St. Michael's Academy held their second annual field day and track meet at the Exhibition Grounds with marked success. The meet was conducted with exactness and precision, each event following the other in quick succession. Director Ed Schrieder officials introduced a new plan that also speeded up the meet. For instance, junior, intermediate and senior sprinters were taken to the track and starting point at the same time, the juniors were sent on their way and as soon as they finished the intermediates ran the century to be followed in a moment or so, after the termination of the first race of course, then came the seniors. In all it took about five or six minutes to run off these three events. Then again when the running broad jump was attracting attention in the jumping pit, the high jumpers were losing the shot in another part of the grounds, thereby saving time. The idea was one of which could doubtlessly be copied at other local track and field meets.

Congratulations are due Jack Doyle, senior champion of St. Mike's field day, F. O'Neill, intermediate and Jack Holland, who won the junior group. Those three champions were all pretty keen and keen opposition, however, by their many opponents. Eddie Schrieder and his able band of assistants are to be congratulated for the showing of their boys. Mid-season athletes as it must be remembered that this field day affair was not only introduced last year, but is rapidly growing in importance as performances are any criterion. The winners of the various events qualify for the meet in the Inter-Collegiate school track and field meet at Kingston next month. Incidentally the various winners to be declared at the I.C.A.A.A. field day on the 31st instant will also qualify for the meet at Picton. Last year the district athletic meet for secondary Schools athletic meet was held in Kingston.

Local boxing fans who attended Wednesday night's card at the arena still are of the opinion that "Tiger" Riffon, the Chicago lightweight was literally robbed by the judges, but the majority of fans are inclined to agree that Riffon carried just enough punches to the body to win a decision and therein lies the key to the dissatisfaction being registered by the fans. Another of the undoubted persons complained to Promoter Ernie Smith when interviewed after the objectors that he had nothing whatsoever to do with the judging. As we understand matters now that the judges voted for Wheeler while the other voted for Carey, despite instructions that no draw decisions would be rendered in the three-round amateur bouts, these instructions coming direct from the amateur athletic executive. Now if the judges had done the bout was a "pip" while the fans above the arena were well aware of the average for a town the size of Belleville, but on such a decision as that established, that being the fact that local fans will turn out when good boxing events are staged locally.

Some local sport fans did not read the result of the drawings for the schedule for Senior Baseball Club wrestling show at the arena when they were published in yesterday's issue. For the benefit of those we will republish the list which is as follows: Tuesday, May 21st, 8.30, 482, 549, 666, 744, 218 and 942.

Those holding tickets bearing the program numbers are entitled to two seats each for tonight's bouts. Incidentally there is to be a preliminary group about the Gyroffy-Dunlop grand tussle, one of the bouts being the Hungarian has a chance with the Cleveland boy, Jack Reed and also Referee Jack Forbes is to be here this evening. Forbes is a tough customer himself and it is safe in saying he will make the boys toe the scratch pronto. That is important as the main bout is the best in the district-Grace Reed, both being tried and proven wrestlers.

Carpenters started to work at the Exhibition Park yesterday building a new fence to the baseball diamond for the baseball baseball clubs. These fences will be placed under the grandstand at the western extremity of the island, a feature that has long been needed by the ball fans in the city. Then again we understand that the baseball diamond will be moved and we are to find the players' dugouts on the north side of the grandstand, where the paddock now is. Whether this is a wise move or not remains to be seen. It is safe in saying the players and perhaps the fans will not relish the change in shift before the first of July. The idea is a good one insofar as bringing the players in closer proximity with the fans is concerned, but there are two sides to every such idea. Is our humble opinion. For instance they will have to erect a top foot wall between the two baseball diamonds and isolated players during some of the heated discussions that sometimes occur. Of course if the fans will stay in these verbal battles we suppose it is perfectly all right.

Coach Mills and Manager Young announced today that a full nine innings ball game would be played between the Regulars and the Variagans at the ball park on Saturday afternoon, to be followed with the final practices on Monday and Tuesday before the opening in Kingston next Wednesday and here on the 24th.

On Saturday evening an interesting swimming meet is being sponsored in Peterboro by the Y.M.C.A. at that city at which a large number of local entries will compete. Ralph Morton is in charge of the local contingent of swimmers that includes Francis Gardiner and Doris Gardiner, city female champion swimmers, and Mrs. Barry, the senior champion in this class while Doris Ashton and Edna Rush will also represent Belleville-"T". A large field of senior boys will be included and are centered of H. Mussell, Jeff. Young, W. Wallace, J. Cole, Carl Gruber, Jas. Andrews and A. Stalcher while the juniors to be taken by motor to Peterboro by Instructor Marsden are E. Pinsonneault, Stewart R. Clare, D. McBride and D. MacCarty. Coaching assistants Orde Oshawa, Kingston, Belleville as well as Peterboro are expected to be present.

HERE AND THERE—Sam Curry mentor of junior hockey in Tweed and Madoc fame, Trenton bound passed through the city today en-route to Toronto where he will take in the Leafs-Hawks game at Maple Leaf Gardens on Saturday. . . . Scotty Bowman of Kingston and Al Shelley of the N.H.L. and George Fillion, ex-Belleville mentor, were in the city yesterday before heading eastward to the Capital City, Bowman's home. . . . The local soccer team journeyed to Trenton earlier in the week, where they suffered their first defeat of the season, the score being 2 to 1 for Trenton.

Wide Open Race Is King's Plate On Saturday

By D. E. BURRITT

Toronto, May 17 (CP)—Anyone who follows the ways of thoroughbreds knows that this will be the 76th running of the King's Plate at Woodbine Park Saturday afternoon and going to be a thriller. A shade even though R. S. Mclaughlin's three-year-old Listaro looms up as a heavy favorite.

Due to long the opinion of Tom Bird whose booming voice has been calling to rallibird the results of workouts for the past two months and since about 1894, there will be only nine horses in the race, contrary to that's right on the nose of Mc-Laughlin's temperamental gelding. Bird's opinion has been clocking candidates for more than 40 years, so that's pretty big to be sure of the petition for Listaro but he thinks Jones of Jim Dandy, Dugout, Establemates, Epicurus and Eileen D., the brown filly who has held her own with the best three-year-olds in the early trials.

Mystery surrounding the performances of Harry Hatch's Chicopen and Dominion Day, another keen interest in this pair of fillies, and rumors had it that they covered the mile in 1.53, a full second and 1-5 better than the record established by Mclaughlin's Horometer last spring. Still there was no confirmation of the time from Billy Hatch who had nothing to say other than his charges were ready.

Eileen D. raced over the route in the fall season and was thought to be eating the trials and the gelding so far has nothing impressive behind him but he's a fast one and just as good as anything.

A maiden, Tax Free from the stable of W. H. Wright of Barrie, has been gained heavy support from the bay clipped off the nine furlongs in 1.53 and looked good enough. Tax Free has never had a start yet.

Epicurus is the three-year-old filly, year-old, making its third effort in the classic, will carry top weight of 133 pounds.

YESTERDAY'S STARS

Bill Dickey, Yankees—Led assault on Indians with triple, two doubles and single, driving in three runs.

Tom Zachary and Frenchy Bordagaray, Brooklyn—Zachary pitched Pirates in 13-inning game, Bordagaray batted in only run with bases and scored winning run.

Tommy Bridges, Tigers—Limited Senators to six hits for 7-2 victory, fanning none.

ERRORS HELP DEFEAT LEAFS

Catcher Drops Ball to Allow Winning Run To Score

Loose handling of the ball abruptly terminated Toronto's tenure of the leadership in the International League.

Largely as the result of four errors they were back in second place today, yielding the top position to the Newark Bears.

The Leafs dropped a 5 to 4 decision to the Baltimore Orioles. Three errors in the final inning paved the way for two Baltimore runs and catcher Johnny Peacock dropped the ball when he had Spencer cut off at the plate in the third frame and that error gave the Birds their winning margin.

Trailing 5 to 2 in the last half of the ninth, Toronto got on to Sheriff Fred Blake's previously tight delivery and raked him for four hits and two runs before he yielded the mound to Harry Gumbert. Three bases loaded, Gumbert retired Jimmy Ripple to end the final out and saved the game for his side.

Just as the Leafs lost the lead owing to errors, the Bears gained it due to faulty manipulating of the ball by the Montreal Royals. The Bears won it 6 to 4 in 10 innings.

Nolan Richardson rapped a single to produce the winning run and Chad Kinsley walked in the extra tally. The Royals gave a total of five runs on errors in the early innings. The win was cut without expense for Newark for the Bears' starting pitcher, Ted Kleinhans, was forced to retire in the ninth with a sore leg muscle.

The Albany Senators won their first victory in four games at the expense of the Rochester Red Wings whose two run rally in the ninth fell one tally short of tying the count as they lost 8 to 7. Porter and Hogan of Albany drove for the circuit while Ed Coleman of the Red Wings also belied a homer.

Buffalo and Syracuse were idle.

Big Train Says Detroit Tigers Team to Beat

By EDWARD J. NEIL

New York, May 17 (AP)—Walter Johnson, the big train of other days now chugging philosophically in the Cleveland Indians' dugout, has a strange and interesting picture of the American League race this year.

"It looks like we're all going to fool around about two months and then something is going to happen a-thing," he said. "Then in the last third we'll have a real battle for the pennant."

Mr. Johnny brought his Cleveland Indians into town solidly entrenched in second place and not much behind the league leading Chicago White Sox, to the surprise of many baseball fans who have severely handicapped me for several weeks, there is a possibility I will sat ot be put on the voluntary retired list."

Ruth said the cold had affected his eye, causing them to water consistently. Consequently he can't draw a bead on the ball as of old.

Otherwise, he said, he's in good shape and hasn't felt "age" ache or any fatigue since the spring training.

The reports and Ruth's admission that he may retire caused no eyebrow lifting, however, on the part of experts and Emil Fuchs, president of the Braves.

Since the start of the season, the Babe has batted over .350 in the field. He has taken part in fifteen of the league's twenty games and has only two home runs to his credit, as part of an embarrassingly low batting average. The baseball League twirlers are whispering that the erstwhile home run king's hit is a ball effectively any more.

President Fuchs believes Ruth's future depends on Judge Bamblino's showing on the western trip.

Ruth's Future in Baseball Depends on Showing in West

Handicapped All Season By A Heavy Cold

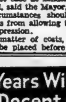
By ROB CAVAGNARO

New York, May 17 (AP)—Babe Ruth's future in baseball took the shape of a huge question mark today.

In the next the big fellow, now 41 years old, somewhat angrily denied published reports that he was "all washed up" and intended to quit as a player on completion of the Boston Braves' swing through the west, starting today in St. Louis. He has been credence to the report by saying he might put himself on the voluntary retired list soon if he were unable to shake off a cold which he said had been cramping his style.

"There's not a word of truth in that story," Ruth asserted today as he checked in at St. Louis hotel. "I will say, however, that I have not been myself by a whole lot so far this spring and, unless I am able to shake the present cold that has severely handicapped me for several weeks, there is a possibility I will sat ot be put on the voluntary retired list."

Ruth said the cold had affected his eye, causing them to water consistently. Consequently he can't draw a bead on the ball as of old.



Otherwise, he said, he's in good shape and hasn't felt "age" ache or any fatigue since the spring training.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED—

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

Due to the tragic experience of the last months, India had forever lost its attraction for Roger Greil. After that adventurous summer, changed and matured, he was glad to return to England. Another year found him out of Oxford.

There, working hard, trying to forget his first love, had graduated with honors; had played cricket, rowed, and rowed stroke on the victorious crew against Cambridge. The following six months he spent on the continent.

This was before he entered his uncle's London chambers as a barrister. One spring night of scented beauty, he strolled the terrace at Monte Carlo, enjoying the orchestra's gypsy melodies.

Idly watching the twinkling lights dotting the Riviera hillsides, his attention was suddenly arrested by a young woman passing him. Just a second her dark eyes met his and Roger, heart leaping, almost cried out: "Pat!"

Chain Letters For Shut-Ins Newest Novelty

A new sort of chain letter, a refreshing variant to the present get-rich-quick letters, that are making the rounds of the continent, and one that will bring comfort and recreation to hospital and home shut-ins has appeared. One of the letters of the chain, that was started by a patient in the Kingston General Hospital, has been received by a resident of this city. Only kindness and generosity are needed by the recipients to complete the chain.

The letter reads:

"My Dear Friend:

"Avaricious chain letters are not novelties. Everyone knows that a six-name list, faithfully played will bring thousands of letters to the originator of a good deed. Happily, is a chain, that is different. The player gets nothing but the knowledge of a good deed well done.

"Attached are the names of six shut-ins, people who are unable to enjoy life as you, six people, who appreciate kind thoughts and little surprises.

"If you would join the Friendless Club, make within three days five copies of this letter, leaving off the first name and adding at the bottom of the list the name of the most worthy shut-in you know. To the address removed send other flower, one magazine, a picture post card or a view you enjoy or any other thing that fits the shut-in of your nomination well. M, those to whom you forward this letter have the same spirit of kindness as you, receive 15,625 thrills of pleasure."

4 DOOMED NAZIS' LIVES ARE SPARED

Lithuanian Plotters Will Spend Lives in Prison

Kaunas, Lithuania, May 18—(AP)—President Antanas Smetona today commuted to life imprisonment the death sentences of four Memel Nazis condemned by a Lithuanian court for plotting the seizure of the Memel Territory to the Reich.

The President himself made the initiative in communicating the death verdicts after the Nazis refused to appeal for clemency. Their lawyers had asked mercy but legally the request was invalid as it did not bear the signature of the condemned men.

Today's decree provided the men would lose their citizenship and their property would be confiscated. They will be confined in Kaunas fortress, the Lithuanian Bastille, similarly charged who were recently sentenced to terms of imprisonment of from six months to 12 years, will be transferred to provincial prisons.

Several territory police were reinforced by order patrolmen to discourage any possible anti-government demonstrations. Strong forces of police patrolled the Kaunas streets and double guards were mounted at the prison gates.

Famed Woodpecker Killed by Slingshot

Chicago, May 18 (CP)—A mantle of soothing peace lay over Pleasant avenue today. Stilled was the blithe, raucous rat-tat-tat which for the past three springs has played havoc with the neighbors' nerves. Absent, also, was the drain pipe drumming woodpecker, who died.

Among those whose sleep has been stopped at dawn by Adolphus' unfailing reveille were Attorney-at-law Franklin Phillips, scion of the Merryn N. Phillips family. It was Franklin who brought peace to the neighborhood after the last marksmen of the Chicago police department had failed.

For three springs at the same hour each morning Adolphus has perched himself on the drain pipe of the Phillips' home and with gusto and self-appointed zeal tapped out exemplifying compositions. Then silence when Adolphus began.

Franklin and Adolphus in a nearby tree. Franklin aimed his slingshot, Crack! and that was the end of Adolphus.

The city waterworks plant is still an attraction for visitors of the city it is reported by officials of the department. Scores of visitors still take the opportunity of inspecting the plant but the majority of them are from points outside the city. FARMERS ALARMED AT COOL WEATHER

DIRECTORS OF "Y" ARE RE-ELECTED

Annual Meeting of Association Follows Banquet

The 42nd annual meeting of the Belleville Young Men's Christian Association was held in the spacious hall of the Y.M.C.A. on Friday evening, May 17th., with a large number of the executive, members and guests of the Association in attendance.

The customary banquet was commenced at 6.30 p.m. and was presided at by the reading of "O Canada" and Grace by Rev. Dr. James Smith, President of the Ministerial Association.

Mr. H. P. Duff was chairman, for the occasion while Mr. Russell Wotten was musical accompanist for the songs.

Rev. W. J. Walker, minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, took charge of the devotional period which followed directly after the banquet. The hymn "How Great Thou Art" was sung and the Scripture was taken from the 11th Chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew.

Mr. M. P. Duff in a few introductory remarks welcomed the guests and expressed his appreciation to the Ladies' Auxiliary and the Y's Men's Club for their beneficial work during the year.

Rev. W. J. Walker gave an address basing his talk on the impatience of John the Baptist, when he was in prison some months after he had baptized Christ. "There are three kinds of impatience", said Rev. Mr. Walker. The impatience that men have with God because God doesn't work fast enough for the human mind. Impatience with ourselves and the impatience with others.

"This is an impatient world and it doubts Christ's presence. We learn patience through prayer and meditation".

During the period left for the election of directors it was moved by Mr. R. J. C. Graham that the retiring directors be re-elected for a three-year period. This was seconded by Mr. Harry F. Jennings, and carried. These directors are:—

H. W. Ackerman, M. F. Edwards, J. B. Findlay, G. E. Griffin, O. B. Smith and G. F. Coles.

Mr. F. C. Middleton, principal of the local Collegiate Institute moved a vote of thanks to the ladies "whenever they are in trouble or need help, it is the ladies whom we fall back on, and I want to take time to thank the Ladies' Auxiliary for their splendid work throughout the year," declared Mr. MacLaurin.

Mr. H. W. Ackerman presented Mrs. Hickey, President of the Ladies' Auxiliary with a bouquet of roses for her untiring efforts in the interests of the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Joseph Rawlinson presented Mrs. Rawlinson with a lamp. For six years Mrs. Rawlinson has given faithful service in the care of the dormitories at the Y.M.C.A.

"God Save the King" closed the meeting.

Members Renew Subscriptions In Canadian Concert Association

Last Season's Artists Stirring Musical World

1935-36 OUTLOOK

More than half the membership of last year of the Canadian Concert Association has already been subscribed to, which is indeed a tribute to the committee here and to the concerts. Wagtrofi, Russian baritone, who appeared here last April, is being given an audition by Edward Johnson of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Kayla Mitzel, famous violinist has announced a concert in Town Hall in New York, under the Metropolitan Bureau management. Ella Goles and Mabel Yanova, the two piano team, who were so popular here appear as guest artists with the Symphony Orchestra in Toronto next week.

People of Belleville in all walks of life are realizing that music is one of their most valuable experiences which brings a release from everyday monotony and opens a new outlet for aesthetic, emotional pleasure. The radio offers a slight contribution to this end, however it is only in the concert-hall, where the listener sees the artist in person, and where the artist shares his personality with the audience, that the fullest measure of this pleasure can be experienced. John Goss and the London Male Choir, who are making a tour of the United States and Canada this autumn will be included in the series here if there are 600 members, and there is every indication that the concert will be far beyond that figure. Napanee, Stirling, Picton, Trenton and Madoc have all been reorganized and there are many new applicants from here. Many people have called personally or phoned to campaign headquarters, Chamber of Commerce, and it shows the interest that is being taken. The campaign ends on Tuesday of next week, after which no members will be accepted until 1936, their members are admitted to the concerts.

Under the concert plan, all artists appearing here play afternoon concerts for scholars and students of local schools.

JOHN GOSS AND SINGERS

Who are expected to give one of their popular concerts in Belleville during the coming winter in Belleville Collegiate auditorium for the members of the Canadian Concert Association. Only two of the four London Singers are shown in the above picture but in reality Mr. Goss was addressing the whole group at the time it was taken. Goss is a great artist who is not afraid to give much fun in his recitals as well as much of the more seriously athletic side.

TRENTON

CHILD STILLBORN INQUEST FINDING

Evidence Ends in Inquest on Body Found in Woods

Trenton, May 18.—(Special)—The inquest to enquire into the death of an infant that was found last Sunday in a woods of Dennis Carr in the 2nd Concession of Sidney, was concluded last night before Coroner Dr. J. W. Farley. After ten minutes deliberation the jury returned a verdict of "stillborn on delivery". The jury was N. J. McNair, foreman, Fred Smith, Charles W. York, Ken Crouch, E. Allison, Charles Allore, James Grainger and Cecil Mahon.

Dr. George H. Stobbs of Belleville, was the first witness called. He performed a post-mortem with Dr. F. A. McQuade of Trenton. Dr. Stobbs gave a hemorrhage as the cause of the death and that neither lung was inflated that would show that the infant had never breathed. Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan asked the witness if the child had died from lack of attention. Dr. Stobbs replied that the child was fully developed with no expansion of the lungs but he believed that there had been no attempt to get the child breathing. When asked if any marks of violence were shown, the doctor replied that the body was too badly decomposed to ascertain.

Doctor's Testimony

Dr. McQuade gave practically the same evidence as the former witness. He also stated that on April 19 in March a boy from the McMurter home called at his office and asked the doctor to come to their home at once. Dr. McQuade had been ill for two weeks previous and could not, come but advised the boy that if it was serious trouble, that he better call another doctor. Later during the night Mrs. McMurter called and stated that the child was born dead, but several months premature. She asked as to the disposition of the body and Dr. McQuade stated that in such a case the body could be buried. He was not informed that the child was fully developed.

Mrs. William Anderson, testified as to the finding of the body in the woods last Sunday, when she and her husband together with Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Jackson of Plainfield, were gathering wild flowers.

Chief William Bain said that he had been called to the scene and brought the body to Cobley's Undertaking Parlours and notified the coroner. The next day he took Mrs. McMurter and her daughter into custody. Mrs. McMurter told the Chief that she had deposited the body and went to the scene to show the spot and it was the same as where the child was found.

No Parcel Seen

Harry Howe of Trenton, testified that Mrs. McMurter had asked him to drive her to the country last March. She did not give him the reason and he also told the jury that he did not see a parcel of any kind. He asked Mrs. McMurter her reason for going into the wood, but she had replied that she could not tell him.

Mrs. Ethel McMurter, mother of eleven children, of whom eight are living, was next on the stand. She told of the birth and swore that the child was dead at the time. She also told of the talk with Mr. McQuade the night of the birth. She said she never told her daughter of the disposition she had made of the body. She also said that she never told Mr. Howe the reason for her actions the night she placed the body in the wood.

Girl Tell Story

Myrtle McMurter, aged 18, told of the delivery of the child without medical aid. She suffered no ill effects and also stated that it was her second child, as she has a child one and a half years old. She said that her mother never told her what was done with the dead baby. After the witness the evidence was completed and the jury retired.

Mrs. McMurter was charged guilty to concealing the body of a dead child and the daughter pleaded guilty to the charge of murder in front of the birth when arraigned before Magistrate Butler in Trenton court on Thursday. Both were remanded for sentence until May 23. They were allowed their freedom on bail.

LEG BROKEN WHEN STRUCK BY CAR

Ray Cassidy, Station St. Admitted to Local Hospital

Roy Cassidy, 26, of 121 Station Street, sustained a fractured right leg, bruises and a severely lacerated left arm, when knocked down by a motor car in front of the Chamber of Commerce Building last evening, at 5.00 p.m. Cassidy was rushed to the Belleville General Hospital by Sergeant Booth and Detective Isard in the city ambulance, where the fracture was reduced and medical attention given by the interns under the direction of Dr. G. Morgan.

Cassidy was struck by a motor car being driven northward on Front Street by A. G. Emerson of Kingston. According to the local police Cassidy darted out between two parked cars directly into the path of the Diamond-driven automobile giving the driver absolutely no chance to avert striking the pedestrian. No charges were laid against Mr. Simmons, who stopped his automobile abruptly and rendered every assistance possible.

Take This Advice To Protect the Health of Your Loved Ones

Every housewife knows that sound health is the most priceless possession her family can have. Without it there is little real happiness in the home. So naturally she uses thought and energy to keep her husband, her children and herself fit and well.

The health and strength of the bodies in her care depend chiefly on the food she provides and prepares. Three meals a day—seven days a week. Truly she needs all her wits and ability to cope with them!

Yet an infallible guide is always close at hand to help her in diet planning for those twenty-one weekly meals and to discover wonderful new foods for her.

The food products advertised in The Ontario Intelligencer have friendly names that stand for highest quality. Many of them satisfy the needs of millions, year after year. Painstaking research and specialized knowledge ensures that these foods contain the vital elements that confidence insists upon to build strong, virile bodies and keep them in the best of health. These advertisements show how she may send her loved ones out into the sunshine of life each morning and guard their precious health throughout each long day.

She can trust them entirely, because without good faith, fair dealing and excellence no product can face the severe test of public approval year by year. Advertising helps GOOD products, but it sweeps bad or indifferent ones off the market.

By following the food advertisements she provides health-giving nourishment to build perfect bodies. By providing the best she saves time and energy, spends her money wisely and follows the high road to true economy.

BUY THE FOOD PRODUCTS ADVERTISED IN THE ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER. THIS IS THE BEST WAY TO PROTECT THE HEALTH OF YOUR LOVED ONES

BUSINESS LOOKING BETTER!

Who said business is not looking better? Certainly this is counter evidence in the person of Miss Virginia Kingsberry, a junior at Texas Christian University, Fort Worth. She has just been named "Miss Business of 1935" by her fellow students in the department of business administration in the school.

MOSCOW DISPLAYS MECHANICAL MILITARY STRENGTH

Moscow's May Day bristled with the spirit of militarism. One of the features of the day, in Red Square—the political stage of Red Russia—was a great tank parade during which hundreds of lumbering forts on caterpillars rolled through the square, and aeroplanes crested a deafening roar of approval, with wide-open motors running at full load, as they flew over the procession. In this view of the tank parade, the giant propaganda aeroplane "Maxim Gorki" is seen flying above the square escorted by two Gad-fly" two-seaters.

PARIS SUFFRAGETTES STORM POLLS

This scene was recently enacted during the recent municipal election balloting in Paris, when militant suffragettes came to the polling booths with their own ballot boxes and proceeded to cast their votes, until stopped by the gendarmes. The "stopping" was a bit of manual labor by the police, as can be seen from the picture. It happened in the famous Montmarize section of the French capital. Note the slant of a blow from a feminine fist in the foreground.

HO HUM! JUST ANOTHER AEROPLANE BURNING UP

"Let 'em roar!" That was the defiance of the inventor, as he sat in the cockpit of an aeroplane as it was set afire. He was testing a special asbestos suit for the Royal Aeronautical Society, London. When the flames were at their height, the man calmly stepped from the cockpit and walked away unharmed. A man on the right is assisting him.

Sir Hubert Wilkins will accompany other expeditions to the Antarctic. Two Canadian fliers, Hollick-Kenyon and Lymburner, will be chief pilots.

Friday night at Johnstone's Academy a bridge, euchre and dance was held and that spacious auditorium was filled to overflowing with young and aged alike. It proved to be one of the most enjoyable events of the season, as those in charge did all in their power for the comfort and pleasure of their many guests. The hall was prettily decorated for the occasion with flags and mottoes, the estimated attendance may be judged from the fact that eighty-two euchre tables were in play and upwards of forty tables of bridge with a number of dancers. With the Boy Scouts

Baden-Powell's final words at the Australian Jamboree were as follows: "But now shibboth Faith, Hope, Love, these three, and the greatest of these is Love."

Brother Scouts— We have come to the end of our Jamboree and our meeting for the last time—for some of us. But in this there is no cause for melancholy, but rather the opposite; it is an occasion of thanksgiving for a very happy experience. Each one of us will carry away a different impression according to his temperament, but all such impressions cannot fail to be happy ones and to add new incentives to Scouting, in its methods, in its possibilities, and in new friendships and comradeships begun.

I have repeated until you must be weary of it the value of such friendships towards World Peace. Remember, however, that these international ideas (even those in the auxiliary ideas (even though the floor-boards are hard) on Leagues of Nations, Disarmament Pacts, and so on, but they are a delicate plant to cultivate in a world of treaty of Versailles, and sanctions. You can't force a round with leagues and pacts and agreements, but those are the soil wherein the plant it is rightly prepared soil—the spirit of good-will, of the peoples themselves.

One great lesson, therefore, that we can learn from our Jamboree here is that friendship and goodwill between people of different races is incredibly simple as we have seen in practice in our camp.

Our World Brotherhood beyond the Jamboree should be the same as Our Job, therefore, as Scouts is to keep up and spread more widely yet that international goodwill.

Charles Latham, Boy Scout, Australia, as in most other countries, there has been in the past unreasonably little or no friendship between parties and States. A house divided against itself cannot stand. It is good citizenship and true patriotism for every man to break down barriers of class, creed and states, and to aim for a united nation; and for the whole united world of peace and goodwill, prosperity and happiness. The first step to this end is for each individual to practise good citizen. That is the aim of the Scout Training. From Cub to Scout, and Scout to Rover is a progressive training in the Scout Law. The Cub Scout says "A Scout" is a motto handed to us by Lord Baden-Powell to live up to," one when you have ceased to be a Rover to be an Old Scout," by continuing to keep in touch as far as you can with the Movement, and the Regular Scout life to the Scout Law, especially the 4th, Courtesy.

You will, as a grown-up, meet with difficulties in life. Face them cheerily and manfully, and you will them as the salt of life. Without occasional roughs, the smooth would be insipid. Think over how you life I have found at least three ways in which difficulties can be met successfully met, in addition to the wellknown motto of the Scout Law, "A Scout smiles and whistles under all difficulties".

The first is duty. You may often be divided between your inclination and pleasure; and duty. The right side is always the right side. Secondly, fairness. Every question has its two sides. When a problem is before you, hear both sides before you decide on your course of action. Don't do to others as you would not like to be done to you. Thirdly, common sense. Use your brains. Think out things. Don't be guided by others' opinions, but by your own. Think out your own line of action. Don't do a thing because it is the fashion, or because others are doing it. Don't do a thing because it is the easiest way out of a difficulty. Don't do it because it is the most popular way. Don't do it because it is the most profitable way. Don't do it because it is the most pleasant

CHEMICAL BOILS, FIRING BUILDING
Upper Floors of Coo Building in London Gutted

London, Ont., May 18 (CP)— A fire department investigation was opened by Chief Charles Scott today to determine the cause of the blaze which gutted the upper floors of the Coo building.
Thousands of dollars damage resulted to the stores and offices in this building by heat and water poured on to the flames by firemen who fought the fire from three sides of the structure.
Chief Scott said the cause of the fire had not yet been determined but he discounted the rumor a fire had started anything to do with the outbreak.
"I am convinced the blaze was purely accidental," he said. "I am told there were no people working on one of the upper floors and that something they were working with boiled over or that the flames within a few seconds the flames were leaping in huge partitions."

Anxiety Over Kitten

Police and firemen combined their efforts at the early stages of the fire to rescue several families housed in apartments on the third floor and Robert Fraser, who was lowered down a ladder to safety by Fireman George Porter. When brought to the street, he expressed great concern for his Persian kitten which could have perished in the fire.
The flames quickly spread the upper floors of the building before a time the entire block appeared doomed to destruction. Manley Doolittle, who first noticed the flames rushed into the building, after he told a boy to ring the alarm. The officer guided an Armenian family to safety through the smoke filled stairway.

Roof Collapses

Shortly after the blaze was discovered the flames had eaten their way to the roof and within a short time the roof collapsed. Flames mounted high into the air and their reflection could be seen for miles.
Valuable documents were removed from the office of the C. P. Express by T. F. Chatterton, who was called to the scene.
The scene of the fire was one of the oldest buildings in downtown London.
For many years it was owned by the late Peter Birtwistle, who disposed of it to W. C. Coo, who later sold it. It is now owned by Hyatt Bros.
It was stated George Armstrong said he and Sam Cyrel had just gone into the building to search for a friend and found two men working in the office making a chemical preparation for mothballs when it boiled over and flames leaped to the ceiling.

AT THE CAPITOL

Barbara Stanwyck Scores Artistic Success in "Red Rose"

Career

"The Woman In Red", Barbara Stanwyck's latest starring vehicle, is scheduled as the feature attraction at the Capitol Theatre beginning Monday. The picture is based on Wallace Irwin's popular novel, "Morris Gest", which is a glamorous romance with intensely dramatic scene and replete with thrills.
The story deals with the romance of a young aristocratic Kentucky girl, portrayed by Miss Stanwyck who through family financial reverses becomes a professional rider at society horse shows. She meets Gene Raymond in the role of a scion of a blue blooded Long Island family, also impoverished. It is love at first sight with Miss Stanwyck. But Miss Stanwyck's employer, a part played by Genevieve Tobin, is herself madly in love with Raymond and sets out to prevent the match between Miss Stanwyck and Raymond.
John Eldredge has the role of a wealthy man of the world, a rival rider of Miss Stanwyck with whom he is madly infatuated. Miss Stanwyck, while in love with her own husband, is deeply indebted to the other man and finds herself in trouble. Eldredge has yacht to help him out in a business deal, and in an accident in which a girl is drowned and Eldredge held for murder.
In a sensational court trial, Miss Stanwyck finally reveals her identity as the daughter of the owner of the yacht. There is a smashing climax when her husband's family, who never have approved of her, appear in court in a body to save the family pride.
Others in the cast include Gene Lockhart, Dorothy Tree and Phillip Reed.

TOMORROW'S YOUTH

The modern tragedy of broken homes and its deplorable effect on modern youth, are poignantly pointed out in the appealing picture, "Tomorrow's Youth", now in complete feature on the same programme.
The plot concerns the domestic difficulties of debonair Tom Hall, a young attorney who finds himself involved in a rather sordid love affair with gold-digging Jane Hoskins. Upon the discovery by Tom's wife results in separation, with the former's child until the final divorce hearing, the boy will remain six months in the custody of each parent.
Finding happiness in a rural existence with his mother, seven-year-old Junior is unable to comprehend the fate that sends him back to his father's care without his mother with him. Given every luxury, Junior's heart is less neglected by his father, and finds solace in the pastime of training pigeons.
Tom, after attempting to get away from his tutor's care that is seriously injured, and unwittingly is the cause of the painful illness of his parents.
Other members of the cast who perform very creditably are Barbara Bedford, Harry Bradley, Miles Welch, Jane Darwell and Richard Lesliet.

AT THE ELLIS

"Sweet Music"

95 Whole Minutes of Grand and Glorious Entertainment

Rudy Vallee, world-famous radio crooner, comes to the Belle Theatre today in the latest and most pretentious of Warner Bros.' mammoth musicals, "Sweet Music".
Vallee will be heard in a half dozen catchy song numbers especially written for the picture. Ann Dvorak also sings and dances in spectacular numbers. Still another song bird who will be heard in the picture is Helen Morgan, famous torch singer who made such a hit in "Show Boat".
Rudy Vallee's Connecticut Yankees appear in the picture as does the Frank and Milton Britton band which will dispense red hot tunes.
The music and lyrics were written by three of the most famous song teams, Warren and Dubin, Dixon and Wrubel and Ted Koehler.
The picture, which carries a definite kick to it, is filled with romance, drama and hilarious comedy. It is the story of a young college boy who organizes a band and makes good as a crooner and orchestra leader in the big night clubs and over the radio. He falls in love with a beautiful singer, and helps her up the ladder to success although she thinks he is jealous of her and is trying to keep her career down.
There is a large and talented cast to play in "Sweet Music". Rudy Vallee Dvorak as his leading lady. Helen Morgan plays herself, a blues singer, while others include Ned Sparks, Robert Armstrong, Allen Jenkins, Joseph Cawthorn, Al Shean, Phillip Reed, William B. Davidson, Russell Hicks and Addison Richards.
Scores of beautiful girls are seen in the dance numbers and spectacular ensembles which were directed by Robert Vignola.
You will enjoy every minute of "Sweet Music" and hundreds of Belleville and vicinity film lovers who enjoyed a recent Sunday evening at the Belle Theatre. There is a fascinating romance with dramatic interludes, plenty of which were dispensed by six of the screen's funniest comedians, and some dazzling gorgeous spectacles and dancing.

"Becoming Dad"

"Becoming Dad" is the title of a very funny "Frolics of Youth" comedy to be presented on the same program with the Belle Latest News Flashes.

"THE THIN MAN" RETURNS!

William Powell and Myrna Loy return to the Belle Tuesday, in "The Thin Man" Mary Robson and Preston Sturges on the same program in "Strangers All".

Report Says Fourteen Killed in Street Fighting

Vienna, May 18 (AP)—Unofficial and official reports from Austrian provinces reaching here today said fourteen people had been killed in street fighting in the Yugoslav Provinces of Slovenia and Croatia, allegedly when Austrian young recruits refused to perform military duty in Macedonia.
At Ljubljana it was reported a crowd of 200, mostly recruits, raised the forbidden Croatian flag in defiance of officers and succeeded in beating off an attack by police and Serbian troops.
The Slovenian and Croat recruits, the report said, contended they were physically unfit to serve long terms in Macedonian climate and claimed the Belgrade Government's real intention was to get them out of their home districts where dissatisfaction with the Yugoslav regime is said to be growing.

TRADING BRISK ON LOCAL MART

Live and Dressed Hogs Advance in Price In Past Week

The local market on Saturday was one of the largest trading days here in some time as both sellers and buyers were largely represented. Trading was quite brisk with prices reasonable.

A feature during the past week was the advance in the price of dressed and live hogs of from 50c to 75c which will be much appreciated by those who have pigs to dispose of. Live hogs are $8.75 per cwt. and dressed hogs $11.50.

In the grain market there are no changes to note in prices.

Eggs showed an advance of from 1c to 2c per dozen for No. 1 with pullet eggs stationary in price. The ruling price for butter was 25c per pound.

Garden plants were shown in profusion and considerable quantities were disposed of.

Fish vendors did a good trade, with prices slightly lower than a week ago.

In the interior of the market building, home made cooking was a feature with some favorable trading.

MARGARET FINKLE GOLD MEDALLIST OF 1935 NURSES

Hon. Dr. J. A. Faulkner Addresses Graduating Class

HELD AT COLLEGIATE

Mayor Tice Performs Duties of Chairman for Fourth Year

High tributes was paid the private duty and public health nurse by the Honorable Dr. J. A. Faulkner, Minister of Health in his address at the graduating exercises of Belleville General Hospital held in the Collegiate Auditorium last evening. Nine young ladies received their diplomas, and Miss Margaret Finkle of this city, being the winner of the coveted gold medal for general proficiency.

Mayor Tice presided—Miss Thelma Bird and Miss Margaret Finkle of Belleville; Miss Bernadine Brintnell, Brighton; Miss Eva Meeks, Verona, Miss Catherine McCallum, Prescott, Miss Esther Lang, Ballinafad, Miss Verna Mellon, Trenton; Miss Marjorie McNicoh, Vermonville, Miss Beryl Chunis, Port Hope; and Miss Grace Jaconb of Schreiber.

Graduates Look Smart

Members of the Graduating Class of their years while uniforms and carrying their beautiful graduation bouquets were seated on the platform immediately in front of the training class and made a most appealing picture, the stage being banked with baskets of roses and ferns.

Mayor George O. Tice acted as chairman and Dr. Father J. J. Collins asked the benediction which opened the evening's interesting program. Mayor Tice in his address referred to the fact, that this was the fourth year in which he had presided as chairman of graduating exercises. He welcomed to the city, the Hon. Dr. J. A. Faulkner, one of Belleville's outstanding citizens, who although very busy found time to come to the City for many in demand. The great field of the Victorian Order whose wonderful work among the sick, instituted, its counterpart, the St. Elizabeth Nurses Service, and the public health branches are open to her.

The Mayor pointed out that Dr. Faulkner has first contributed to cut off the grants to the public health service with the idea in mind not to make harder the lot of the community but to encourage the people who take advantage of the utility of the public health nurse to increase the requirements for the service, not the government."

Speaking on the field of nursing the mentally ill, Dr. Faulkner stressed the fact that the term "insane" would be done away with and public institutions for special care used more frequently. He congratulated the graduates on the privilege to Dr. Faulkner.

Another notice, in the address of His Majesty on the 25th anniversary concluded Dr. Faulkner, "that his people will ever be mindful especially the sick and the children? I do believe that the Queen's Sovereign has the interests at heart of every one of the loyal subjects of our Empire and that she will be proud of service for you. I ask you, members of the graduating class, if you are prepared to follow him in that duty? I believe you are."

"DOWN WITH THE GAS-HOUSE GANG"

This is another version of the little old song which we who lived in the 90's used to sing.

In this case the balloon is substituted for the shoe and the circumstances surrounding its use are rather grim. If Paris should ever be raided by gas bombs the family would crawl into the balloon on the top. Fresh air would be pumped in through a hose and gas masks would be dispensed with.

Above the photo shows a family rehearsing its actions on rushing to the balloon when sirens are sounded. Notice the girls on the right playing games on a table in side the inflated structure.

Considered Washed Up Ferrell Shows Best Hurling Feats of Any Pitcher in Either League

At One Time Thought of Turning to the Outfield

RED SOX GAIN

Dodgers Defeat Pirates and Move Into Near Tie with Giants

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, JR.

Big Wes Ferrell, who once had so much trouble with his pitching arm that he gave serious consideration to the idea of converting himself into a first baseman, has already turned in some of the best pitching performances of the major league season, and it seems he has to do that even to have a chance of winning a fair share of games.

Outstanding on the Red Sox mound corps, Ferrell has probably received less backing from his team mates than any other member of the staff.

He's worked seven games already, won five of them and only once have the Sox provided him with more than four runs to work on. He started with a five-hit, 1-0 triumph over the Yankees, suffered two setbacks when he allowed as many as five runs a game and finally has come through with a pair of brilliant five-hit performances in his last two starts to win them both by 3-1 scores.

Ferrell had to go thirteen innings against the White Sox yesterday to gain the edge over a clever if unlucky mate, 10-1 the only time his teammates gave him any real hitting support. Opposed to 45-year-old "Sad" Sam Jones, Wes turned back two early threats to hold a 1-0 lead going into the ninth. Then Jones, himself a veteran of hitting home run of the early season and it wasn't until the thirteenth that Boston would get the odd run and the pitcher had to help along with his third hit. After Babe Dahlgren smashed a double, Ferrell beat out a bunt and when Lefty Grove slid through the middle on the plate after Bill Werber's grounder, Dahlgren was safe with the winning run.

Gain Full Game.

The triumph enabled the Red Sox to gain a full game on the second-place Cleveland Indians as well as Chicago's league leaders when the Cleveland Indians ran into a 10-run end straight defeat at the hands of the Yankees, 4-2. Johnny Allen held the Indians well in check with six-hit flinging and they escaped a shut out only by Berger's circuit blow in the eighth.

Washington regained sole possession of fifth place by trimming Detroit 10-9 with a three-run counter rally after the Tigers had scored seven times in the seventh while the Athletics moved past St. Louis out of the cellar by blanking the Browns 8-0 on Johnny Marcum's four-hit shoveling.

Brooklyn Dodgers again were the big news in the National League as they clouted out a 7-1 decision over the Pirates and moved into a virtual tie with New York for the lead. Another late attack give the Dodgers their second straight victory. The Giants meanwhile took a painful 5-2 setback at Cincinnati, when Lee Handley started a first-inning blast against Roy Parmelee. Besides losing the game, outfielder Joe Moore and shortstop Dick Bartell of the Giants were injured.

Larry French pitched the Cubs to a neat 5-0 victory over the Phillies, granting only seven hits while his batterymate, Gabby Hartnett, batted in three runs. The Braves with Babe Ruth on the job as usual, pelted one of the Cardinals' rookie pitchers, Ed Heusser, for seven hits and four runs in five innings and trimmed the Cardinals 7-1.

GOLF

St. Anne's-on-the-Sea, Eng., May 18 (CP)—Leading Simon-pures from Canada, the United States and France were gathered in this little Lancashire town today, putting the final touches to their golfing equipment in preparation for the British amateur championship, beginning Monday.

Pre-tournament indications are Lawson Little, husky Californian, defending title holder at Prestwick, two ago at Prestwick, will meet stiff competition.

The experts foresee the possibility of an international final between Little and Jock McLean, talented Scotsman. Both, however, will have a hard fight to get that far.

In McLean's half will be the former champions, John Defoerst and Ray Tion. Michael Scott, as well as C. Ross Somerville, Canadian star from London, Ont., who won the American title in 1932, and Lionel Munn, ex-Walker Cup player.

Giddings Likely Declares Listaro As the Winner

By D. E. BURRITT

Toronto, May 18 (CP)—In the cool shade of the big grey grandstand candidates for the 76th renewal of the King's Plate, oldest continuous-ly run horse race in America, exercised today prior to the final test that within two minutes will set at rest months of conjecture.

Last minute scratches were expected to eliminate P. D. Pedlar's Fasteroan and reduce the field to thirteen starters, ten of which were entered from four stables.

They're been calling it the most wide-open plate competition in years and the scarcity of information concerning the leading contenders made it appear R. S. McLaughlin's Listaro, though top favorite, would not be an overwhelming choice.

Rumors concerning the condition of the gelded son of the Romp II, Listaro, switched much support from the favorite to Harry Hatch's mysterious pair of fillies, Chickpea and Downsick, reputed to have covered the nine furlong plate route under the record time of 1.54 1-5 set by the speedy Barometer last spring.

Unexpectedly, Trainer Harry Giddings of the McLaughlin string, steered two three-year-old fillies along with Listaro and Epicurus. The sudden entry of Eileen D. and Vigil suggested to racing fans there might be some truth in rumors Listaro was not in the best of condition for such a gruelling test.

Will Declare Listaro.

Early reports from Woodbine Park today, however, indicated Giddings, as required by the rules, was prepared to declare Listaro the intended winner. The McLaughlin trainer, well-known for his racing strategy, was expected to use the other two as pace-setters over the long route and Jockey Frank Mann to break out with Listaro on the home stretch.

From past records it was hard to pick an outstanding choice other than Listaro because of the plate after Bill Werber's grounder, Dahlgren was safe with the winning run.

Race for Royal Gu ineas Again To-day

"Derby Day" in Canada is King's Plate day when the oldest continuously run race on the American continent is renewed at Woodbine Park, Toronto. The bigoric plate, which carries an added prize of fifty guineas from the King, will be run today. Here are some scenes from previous runnings. Back-ground—The Plate Day crowd at Woodbine Park, when racing's best are always present generally including the governor-general. TOP horse, will carry the light and dark blue colors of H. C. Hatch; and T. C. Couchesour has Papakio, who is having his third crack at the plate.

A little history of the King's Plate. The purse which carries the largest value of any stake in Canada, 40,000 added, and fifty guineas the gift of his majesty the King.

This royal donation, was originally made in 1859 by Queen Victoria upon the petition of the Toronto Turf Club, through Sir Edmund Head, then governor-general. Headquarters of the club were at W. O. Keele's farm at Carleton, Ont., and the secretary-treasurer was Colonel T. L. Denison. The prayer of the petitioners was for a Queen's Plate of £50 which was granted "to be run at Toronto, or such other place in Upper Canada as her majesty might appoint."

For four years, 1860-1863, the race was run at Carleton and subsequently, under political pressure, at Guelph, London, Hamilton, St. Catharines, Whitby, Kingston, Ottawa, Barrie, Woodstock, Brighton and Picton. In 1883 her majesty, at the instance of the Duke of Argyll, gave her sanction to an understanding with the founders of the Ontario Jockey Club that the race should henceforth be established permanently at Toronto. Time has proved this to be a wise decision, as, under the control of the Ontario Jockey Club, the race has amply fulfilled its purpose of encouraging the breeding of thoroughbreds in Ontario. The Earl of Minto, a former governor-general of Canada, on his return to England, stated publicly, "Nothing in my opinion, has done more good for horse breeding in Canada than the King's Plate, run at Toronto." The race has steadily grown in importance and the royal donation being continued by his majesty, King Edward the Seventh, has been run annually without interruption; so that when King George the Fifth decided to continue the gift the King's Plate was already established as the oldest fixture run continuously in North America.

What the Epsom Derby means to England, what the Kentucky Derby is to America, the King's Plate means to racing fans who live in Canada.

RIGHT, Haymaster, winning the 1934 race for R. S. McLaughlin. LOWER—The field rounding the turn at Woodbine track.

DAY BY DAY

The Belleville Amateur Baseball Association is having over 8,000 programs published in booklet form to be distributed during C.O.B.L. games throughout the circuit this summer. The program was made possible through the medium of the advertising and contains a wealth of baseball information as well as a score card in the centre sheet where fans can keep their own individual score if they so desire. The program is the result of many months of labour on the part of those to sponsor the idea and it will be a credit to the club and the city. Club officers, executive members, citizens and others are included in the program that also includes the C.O.B.L. schedule and other valuable Central Ontario League data. These programs will be distributed free at all games in which the Stewart Warner-Alemite "Radios" appear during the coming season, which incidentally opens in Kingston on Wednesday and in Belleville on the morning of the 24th of May.

Secretary Newton Thompson of the C.O.B.L. in reviewing some of the important legislature passed by the league recently, issued a bulletin that was forwarded to all the clubs in the league. Secretary Thompson also quite wisely has in the clubs forward their signed-up players' certificates by the 24th of May as the season opens. He also says: "A new procedure was adopted in regard to the league play-offs. The teams finishing in third and fourth place in the league in a three-game elimination series with the second place team having choice of clubs and grounds. The team winning this season in each league in a five-game series is the team having won first place, with the first place team having choice of dates and grounds. The playoff dates have been arrived at, however, and we find the local junior boys swinging into action on the afternoon of the 24th with a double-header of junior ball, all four clubs in the league participating. Incidentally we mention that the Hastings County Junior League in the O.B.A.A. will operate in the near future. Only one team from Belleville has signified its intention of operating in this league in 1935, but endeavors are being brought to bear to induce other organizations to sponsor junior baseball and affiliate in the Hastings County loop.

The annual meeting of the Y. M. C. A. was held last night with lengthy reports coming out of each department. The association enjoyed a fairly successful year, chiefly due to the untiring efforts of Secretary Joe Sbeeti and Physical Instructor Ralph Marden. Besides sponsoring an excellent intermediate O. B. A. basketball team, a volleyball league, the various phases of Ki-Y sport, life-saving and swimming club as well as innumerable other athletic activities were indulged in by local boys and girls at the expense, encouragement and sponsorship of the "Y". To which assistance praise cannot be given the Belleville Y.M.C.A. and its officials for their yearly efforts in endeavoring to raise the standard of morals and sportsmanship among the young men, girls and boys of this community.

There is a movement on foot to change the name of the Asiaan Club and the officers have asked us to request suggestive names be forwarded by interested citizens to the secretary of the club. It has been intimated that the word "aquatic" should be included in the new moniker. The young and energetic organization is now paddling, lacrosse, softball, rugby football, and tennis.

Fans, wrestlers and officials all entered into the fun at the arena last night when the main bout ended in a donnybrook with police stepping in and abruptly putting an end to the affair. Doubtless the fans are not satisfied with the ultimate result of last night's main fracas as naturally the paid customers like to see wrestling bouts ended inside of the scheduled circle. At any rate the Eiwanis Club promoters are entering into negotiations with Dunlop, Cryrofty and Referee Jack Forbes with expectations of staging a return bout between last night's principals, owing to the dissatisfactory manner in which the main attraction ended. Personally we believe Dunlop can beat Ilsley on a return bout, as a good one last night. It seems a friend of his (?) phoned him long distance from Toronto on Wednesday seeking a pass for Thursday night's wrestling bouts in Toronto. Jack commised to provide the man on the phone with a card, but after the call had been received Mrs. Forbes little boy found out the telephone call had been sent "collect". Jack said thinks it was a good joke, but seems to fail to see the point. "Yes, from the man got his pass O. K."

Sparring Mates Are Hard to Get

New York, May 18 (CP)—Jimmy McLarnin is training with such gusto for the approaching defence of his welterweight title that manager "Pop" Foster was forced into the market today for fresh sparmates.

Two colored boxers who had been catching the Vancouver Celt's attention at his Swan Lake training camp absorbed such facial punishment yesterday they said no, as if with one voice, "give me mah pay, and let me go back to Harlem."

Frankie Williams resigned after receiving a second "shiner" in two days. Calvin Reed, who said he too was going home, sported a gash on the lower lip that almost extended to the point of his chin. The fact McLarnin's left hook seemed to be finding through and through, with a new zip was responsible for the wounds and resultant dearth of work boys.

Hard by there, in the fashionable camp where Barney Ross is sharpening his weapons for the clash with McLarnin in New York May 31, heavy jarring punches continued to fill the air with thuds and grunts. After winding up an impressive work out Barney reiterated his belief he will win this time by a knockout.

AAJMAAS WIN WALL ST. LOOP

Defeat Cubs in Second Straight Game by 15-11 Count

Clem Bowler's Aajmaas clinched the Wall Street softball pennant when they defeated the College Hill Cubs by the score of 15 to 11 in a free hitting orgy at Central Park last night, the Aajmaas having won the previous night's game, taking the series in two straight games.

Extra base hits coming from the bats of both teams accounted for the high scoring evidence, four home runs being registered during the seven innings played. Sager buried for the Aajmaas while Gregg Jenkinson and Lee Ketcheson, losers, both pitchers being hits rather freely throughout. The Cubs staged a belated rally in the last inning only to fall four runs short as they had the bases full as the final put out was made by the victorious Aajmaas squad. Hunt, Kizer, Mourant and Tuthill were the big rail-smiths for the Aajmaas while Miller, Hartnett, Lee, Ketcheson, Robinson, Schriteler, L. Jenkinson, G. Jenkinson.

Weight will be no problem to Barney Ross now that he has lost the lightweight crown to rival Jimmy McLarnin May 23 for the welterweight title. BUTLER'S SUIT THROWN OUT

New York, May 18 (AP) — The $100,000 slander suit brought by William Lawrence Graham, butler, against Mrs. Henrietta Flick and her daughter, Margot, was tossed out of court Friday by a directed verdict of Justice Phillip McCook.

Ralph Morden informs us the annual junior school relay race for the Deacon trophy will be run just prior to the opening of the C.O.B.L. season on the morning of the 24th. This race is a half mile relay being run by the B.C.I. juniors last year. Besides the various public schools, relay teams from St. Michael's, B.C.I. and O.S.S.D. are also expected to enter. An age limit determines what starters may face the barrier. Then following this the annual three mile run for the Stroud trophy will get under way. This event was won by Cliff Barber last year. Mr. Morden was in conference with President Rowsome of the B.A.B.A. yesterday and received permission to stage these two races in conjunction with the opening of the baseball season.

Badman Dunlop Disqualified Police Take Action as Gyroffy Tossed Headlong from Ring

Fans and Referees with Wrestlers Tangle on the Floor

3 GOOD BOUTS

Petroff Much Too Smart for Steele in Semi-Final

General bedlam broke loose and local police were forced to show their hand and terminate last night's main bout in the Kiwanis Club's charity wrestling show at the Belleville Arena before six hundred howling fans, when Al Dunlop, self-styled badman from Cleveland, became unruly and started a general riot that terminated in a free-for-all fight outside the ring in which fans, officials and police entered only to have Johnnie Gyroffy, Hungary, the other contestant in the bout also enter into matters, but eventually be led back into the ring and declared winner by Referee Jack Forbes of Toronto as the police escorted the villainous Dunlop from the ring and held him in custody until the angered fans present could get through to do bodily no charges of inciting a riot were laid against Dunlop by the police, the members of the Kiwanis Club interceding on his behalf and saving him from a police court action.

Grudge Affair.

The main bout, a return match between Johnnie Gyroffy and Al Dunlop, carried all the ear-marks of a grudge fight from the outset with both contestants entering pugnaciously into the pastime despite the frantic efforts of Referee Jack Forbes to force the gladiators into resorting to orthodox methods of grappling. The sudden and abrupt ending of the main bout came after each contestant had won a fall and the wrestlers were entering into the third and final round. From the outset it was plain to be seen the wrestlers were in no friendly state of mind as the last round opened with both men on the offensive and resorting to every fair and foul means in order to win. Eventually Dunlop tossed Gyroffy bodily from the ring and hopped over the ropes to endeavor beating the prostrate Hungarian into submission on the sand floor of the arena. Referee Forbes followed to part the battlers, but his efforts were wasted as Dunlop and Gyroffy entered into a fistic encounter that eventually enmeshed fans, police, Referee Forbes and even Referee Bert Wells, the local official came to the rescue of his official mate, but it was only when the police interfered and escorted Dunlop to another part of the arena and held him in custody did matters subside and Gyroffy remained in the ring to be declared winner by Referee Forbes.

Battle Outside Ring.

The main bout opened with both wrestlers taking matters rather seriously until Dunlop resorted to unorthodox methods and found himself being constantly warned by the referee and irritating the fans to no small degree. As early as the first round the contestants battled outside of the ring and were separated by the police and Referee Forbes. Peace was restored for a short period and Dunlop returned to the ring to become more pugnacious and win the first fall with a series of heavy body slams that left Gyroffy prostrate and dazzled after 16.25 minutes of wrestling. After a ten minute recess Gyroffy returned to the ring to win the second fall with three flying tackles terminated by a kick-up and a body slam that saw Dunlop's shoulders pinned to the mat. With each contestant winning a fall the grapplers entered the ring for the third round which ended in a donnybrook, Dunlop being escorted from the ringside by the police, being disqualified and Gyroffy declared the winner.

Dan Petroff, 3?3, Russian, won the semi-final bout over "Bull" Steele of Nebraska, 186, after 21.30 minutes of wrestling in a 45-minute limit affair. The contestants in this bout accomplished the better class of wrestling demonstrating many different holds. Petroff won following a series of flying tackles terminated with a body slam. The bout was most interesting to watch. Jack Dallas, Greece, threw Frank Savit, Hungary, with a body slam after 19.00 minutes of wrestling in the opening bout. Dallas proved much too heavy for his lighter and more agile opponent, Savit.

Main bout—Al Dunlop, 210, Cleveland, disqualified, and Johnnie Gyroffy, 205, Hungary, declared winner in final round, each having previously won a round, a two out of three fall bout, one hour limit.

Semi-final—Dan Petroff, 3?3, Russia, won over "Bull" Steele, Nebraska, 186, 21.30, in a 45 minute limit bout, one fall.

Opener—Jack Dallas, 220, Greece, won over Frank Savit, 186, Greece, in 19.00, one fall, 20 minute limit.

Referee—Jack Forbes, Toronto.

Timekeeper—Bert Wells, Belleville.

Announcer — Frank Domenico of the Belleville Kiwanis Club.

Daily Short Story

TOO OLD

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Steve Bolton was bending over his machine doing the business when the "boss," accompanied by the foreman, entered the shop. Steve had been feeling lazy in the entire warm Spring day but at the sight of Mr. Hardy he hastily straightened up and stepped on the power pedal. . .

He realized what the visit meant. It meant that the annual Spring layoff was coming and that those who were to go were being selected. Steve had been through enough of them to realize that every Spring when work slackened in the shop, the foreman was confronted, privately he hadn't worried. He was a good workman and he knew it. Hardy knew it, too.

But it was different now, Steve was old, too old.

Actually he wasn't old at all, not as the years of a man's life are counted. But, in the brief years in which that same man can stand the straining pace of bitter industrial competition he was old. The machines need men and there is room enough for younger ones.

The Tour

Like others in the shop, Steve envied not to notice the inspection tour, the short conference between Mr. Hardy and the foreman and the notations which the former was making in a notebook. He took courage from desperation. If his name went down it went down and that was all. There is nothing he could do to prevent it. He'd get another job.

But even as he thought it Steve knew that he wouldn't get another job, not with millions of other men already seeking one in vain. He didn't know how he would tell his wife about it. He couldn't tell her. And yet he would have to.

There was none of the usual joking, and laughter when the lunch hour came. Steve ate his corn lunch and then wandered out into the large yard of the manufacturing plant, his step weighted with foreboding.

The crack of a bat against a ball roused him from his thought. The younger men in the plant, the apprentices and office boys most of them in their teens, were playing baseball in the yard. The ball came bounding toward Steve. He caught it and threw it back. It had been years since he had played baseball. But why not, he thought. Why not play now? Why not have a little fun while he could? It wouldn't make any difference not even to Mr. Hardy saw him "wasting his time."

Steven joined the game and soon played harder than he did. None called loader, attempted to run faster or look more apparent slowness from that of others. It was a gesture, the gesture of a man who knew that he was "through" but was determined to take it standing.

He was stiff and sore when he went back to his machine. Muscles he had not used for years had been brought too suddenly and violently into play. But he went on with his work, carefully and quickly.

The Lay-Offs

"As good a man as there is in the shop," he muttered to himself.

Shortly before quitting time the foreman began to make the rounds of the shop, a packet of envelopes in his hand. He stopped at one machine and then another, handing the operator one of the envelopes and saying a few words. Sometimes they were accompanied by a pat on the back. Steve could already feel the foreman's hand on his back and hear the words: "Sorry, Steve, but you know how it is. We're cutting down and—"

Steve didn't even turn his head when the foreman stopped beside him. He didn't look up when he felt a hand on his shoulder. "How're they comin'?" the foreman asked. Steve spoke to the man in the lamp. In his mind, "All right," he said.

"Fine" answered the foreman. "You know, Steve," he went on and then stopped to say, "How it's coming," thought Steve.

The foreman coughed again. "I'm on know, Steve," he repeated, "we're laying some men off. I just thought I'd tell you that your name was down but Mr. Hardy took it off. He thought you were getting kinda old to be out playing ball in the yard today. Then he said that any man who could run around bases with a bunch of kids wasn't too old to do his work." I just thought I'd tell you, Steve."

And the foreman walked on.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking and thinking in his parlor the other day and was not listening to her wrist watch not going, saying, Dont you think it's perfecktly redickulus, Willyum, all this fuss that people make over royalty and titles?

I do indeed pop said, if a child of mine dares up to me and says, Father, I'm a Duke, I'll say to him, Forget it, son you're just old Bill Fout's boy to me, pop said, and ma said, Exactly. How here's a perfect reception given to the Princess Bambeeny at the Stilts Hotel this afternoon. How redickulus. The so called Princess Bambeeny was formally Mrs. Guss Shults of Chicago or somewhere, and she settled 3 million dollers on Prince Bambeeny, so he married her. Who wouldn't pro-bably? pop said.

Proberly, pop said, and ma said, and yet just because she has a Princess to her name, unthinking people imagine she's up on a pedestal and hold a sumptuous reception for her in the ballroom of the Stilts Hotel with bowings and scrapings and exotic flowers and a red carpit spread on the pavement for the benefit of her royal Chicago feet, how redickulus, can you imagine people losing their sense of proportion like that?

Daddy, pop said, and ma sneesed 3 small sneezes, saying, How if I've gone and cawt a cold I'll never forgive her.

You're not by any chance still speaking of the Princess Bambeeny pop said, and ma said of course, naturally, I must of stood out there in the damp in front of the Stilts Hotel for an hour to catch a glimpse of her just to satisfy myself that it wasn't worth the effort, and there was expression and pop made it still madder by laughing.

Notice of Motion Introduced By Trustee Harrison Will Ban Cadet Training at Collegiate

Trustee Ill

Minor details of school management occupied the attention of the meeting, one of the briefest of the present season.

In his opening remarks, Chairman of the Board H. Col. R. A. Gean called attention to the sudden illness of one of their members, Trustee Geo. Sprachtel, now confined in the Belleville General Hospital, and expressed the wish for a speedy recovery.

Following a brief personal explanation for the necessity of the instruments, several new pieces of dental equipment will be purchased for Dr. M. J. Clarke, school dental officer, for use in the school clinics.

Upon the recommendation of the Advisory and Vocational Committee the salary of Mr. Ross Hunter was fixed at $900.00 for the school term of 1935 and '36. Further recommendations that no leave of absence be granted any teacher unless they have a period of nine years' teaching to their credit, and that pupils in the Vocational class be forbidden to use any or all of the power machines in the class room unless an instructor is present, were also passed.

In the monthly report submitted by Principal P. C. MacLaurin, it was shown that at the coming departmental examinations 167 Upper School, 264 Middle School, 72 Technical School, and 350 Lower School students will write. The number of papers will approximate 3100.

The recommendations that Miss Pearl Cole be engaged to manage the school cafeteria for the coming term and that the annual Field Day of the school be held on Thursday, May 30th, were passed.

It was pointed out by Principal MacLaurin that owing to the fact that the present number on the Collegiate and Vocational staff, and organization of the school has been approved of by the Department of Education and been suggested by the Department, he did not see the necessity of the motion of the Board in cutting off one teacher for the coming term. This matter was left over to the school management committee to deal with.

Leave Granted

A request by Mr. Howard for leave of absence for one year beginning October 1st, 1936, and extending to September 1st, 1937, was granted. It was explained that Mr. Howard had been engaged in post graduate work at Cornell University during the summer months and found it necessary to attend the University for an extended period in order to finish his work for his Degree. A teacher is to be secured to fill his position while gone.

A letter signed, "The Assistant Masters of the Collegiate Institute and Vocational School" and read by Trustee H. J. Allin, in the chair in the committees of the whole was protested against my further reduction in salaries. The letter read: "Dear Sirs:—Learn that the Board is contemplating further reductions in salaries. We protest against this action as being unjust, unnecessary and discriminating." It was ordered filed.

"Some of these teachers tick, kick, bite and some of the people too," commented Trustee Geo. P. Ostrom. "I'm stopped on the street several times a day about this salary business. They don't realize, that this Board has to act in accordance with the treasury, the funds it has. What are you doing with us?' they ask. 'We're treating you fairly,' I tell them. 'Be thankful. Be glad that you have a position with a fairly remunerative salary.'"

PREMIER BENNETT TO RESUME SEAT IN HOUSE MONDAY

Most Feel Way

"If I am unable to do the job the way I think it should be done, I don't want to attempt it," Mr. Bennett declared on his arrival in Quebec last night. But he described himself physically fit so far as he could judge and was fortified by the assurance of two London specialists his heart was organically sound.

The same specialists, however, told the Prime Minister he had a "threat and he should have rest.

"I must feel my way," Mr. Bennett said, "to ascertain what I can do. Whether or not I can keep up the pace of the last five years remains to be seen. I do not know what I can do until I try."

Mr. Bennett vigorously denied Canada had entered into any commitments with the Hoare government with respect to Empire defence, No attempt had been made to influence Canadian policy nor had any commitments been given, he said.

Mr. Bennett was greatly improved in health as compared with his condition when he left Canada, nearly a month ago, and in appearance he was very much his normal self.

Would Nominate

Should Mr. Bennett be forced to retire a new leader would be chosen, he said, dismissing a suggestion he would nominate his successor.

The Prime Minister received a group of newspapermen and photographers on board the liner Duchess of York, which brought him to Quebec. Great Britain, he found, was showing continued satisfaction with the Canada-United Kingdom trade agreements.

Words were inadequate to describe the splendor of the Jubilee celebrations or the manifestations of loyalty by the British people to the Crown.

Mr. Bennett told questioners the next Imperial Conference might be held some time in 1936 but neither the time nor the place had been fixed.

The last Canadian budget had been well received in Great Britain, Mr. Bennett believed. A much better feeling had arisen due to increased woollen and cotton textile exports to Canada.

Mr. Bennett was given a warm welcome as he disembarked. A great crowd lined the docks, cheering loudly as the Premier walked down the gangplank and into his railway car nearby. Hon. Maurice Dupre, Solicitor-General, headed those welcoming Mr. Bennett.

The Canadian High Commissioner at London, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, had been seriously ill but had completely recovered, Mr. Bennett said, and no question had risen of his retirement. Mr. Ferguson was one of the greatest ministers to represent the Dominion at London since Sir Charles Tupper.

"He has never ceased to be a Canadian and he has won the admiration and approval of United Kingdom businessmen," Mr. Bennett said. Mr. Ferguson had been actually ill, "perhaps too active" but his health was improved.

Weekly Crop Report

Winnipeg, Man., May 15—Cool weather with precipitation varying from scattered showers to heavy rains and snow has retarded spring operations in many districts this past week. The heaviest precipitation was received in areas which, in the past few years, have been classed within the worst of the drought territory. Grasshopper hatching has been delayed. But the first warm spell should see the arrival of the young hoppers. Moisture conditions over many districts are now excellent and from some areas come reports that farmers would like warm dry weather to enable them to speed up belated seeding, according to the weekly crop report of the agricultural department, Canadian National Railways.

In Southern Manitoba wheat seeding is well advanced and from forty to seventy-five percent of coarse grains have now reached the seed bed. Moisture is plentiful from recent rains and early crown wheat is commencing to appear above ground. No spring cultivating has been done as soil is still too wet. Daily scattered showers with heavy frosts at night have prevailed in the Dauphin-Swan River territory. Wheat seeding is practically completed and from twenty-five to forty percent of the coarse grains are sown. Germination is slow due to cold backward weather.

Along the Lenvan, Lampman, Avonlea, Gravel Bourg, Central Butte, Riverhurst, Bengough subdivision in Southern Saskatchewan, weather has been cool and cloudy with snow and rain. Lands now rather wet and no further moisture is required for some time. Very little seeding has been done this week but early sown fields are commencing to show green.

From Yorkton west through the Watrous, Biggar, Dodsland, Potter, Rosetown, Hanna territories weather has been cold with some heavy rain and snow which delayed operation. Wheat seeding is now about fifty percent complete but a very small acreage of coarse grains has been seeded. All this territory is practically two weeks later than usual but land is in better shape than for some years past.

Along all subdivisions constituting the Prince Albert Division come reports of frost at night. Seeding is in full swing but growth is very slow. Warm weather is required when growth should be rapid as land is in splendid condition.

In South Central Alberta weather has been cool and showery with some light snow. Wheat seeding is approximately eighty percent completed and oats and barley are now being sown. Early planted wheat is showing good ground and general conditions are favorable.

In North Central Alberta about half of the wheat has been sown but coarse grain operations are only commencing. Land is still wet in many places and cool, showery weather with frosty nights has prevailed.

From the Peace River Territory come reports that another heavy rain the beginning of the week further delayed work but weather is now fine and seeding has started.

With a lowering of cattle supplies on Western stockyards prices of all grades took an upswing but it is doubtful if these gains will be held except on better quality animals carrying considerable kill. Thin, or warmed up cattle will have to meet a dragey reception for some time to come. The hog market, while showing slight fluctuations, remained steady with very little change reflected on the week's activities.

WARNED AGAINST STUNTING BEFORE PLANE DISASTER

49 Lose Lives When "Gorky" Crashed by Small Plane

WILL BUILD MORE

Last Speed After Coming Out of The Second Loop

By JOHN LLOYD
Associated Press Foreign Staff

Moscow, May 20—(AP)—A desperate battle to save the motion picture accompanying the Maxim Gorky at the time of Saturday's disaster was disclosed today as having almost caused a second accident.

Pavel Sofiyev in the Gorky, V. Rybushkin, said after a stunting aircraft had crashed into the Gorky, world's largest land plane, a motion picture operator lost his head and jumped out in an attempt to strangle him and pull him away from the controls.

"I lost command of my ship, it went into a spin, and there was nothing for me to do but to strike my companion in the face," the pilot said.

It was not disclosed whether the operator fainted from pain in which 49 persons lost their lives before he became panic-stricken but no pictures of the disaster have been published.

Rybushkin said he heard Ivan Mikhaeff, one of the Gorky pilots, warn pilot Slagin, operating the craft which caused the crash, against stunting before the planes took off.

"Don't try any loops," Mikhaeff was said to have admonished. "You would certainly crash into my ship"

Slagin, offended, was described as retorting, "Don't, not a chance. I've been an aviator 15 years."

After the Gorky completed a short flight and as we were returning to the field, Slagin suddenly narrowly rolls. This Slagin makes again looping," said Rybushkin.

"Coming out of the second loop, he lost speed and crashed into the Gorky's right wing near the motor mounted above the fuselage.

Then the small plane fell away in pieces. The Gorky's right wing fell off and then the tail part of the fuselage buckled and fell away.

"The rest of the plane turned on its back, continued forward at that moment, and then plunged to earth. It crashed into some trees before hitting the ground."

Despite the calamitous crash the Gorky remained intact and will make more plans of the same type.

STUDIED FOR EXAMS CONFINED TO BED

Congratulations are extended to Miss Grace Jeacocke, a member of the 1935 nurses' graduating class of the Belleville General Hospital.

Miss Grace Jeacocke, intimately known as "Jake" to her many friends, has been ill and confined to bed since last November. Handicapped by the fact that she was only able to attend a few of the numerous lectures, that are necessary factors in the curriculum, Miss Jeacocke throughout the long winter months faithfully studied for the graduating examinations. She tried the exams under the watchful eye of one of the nurses' sisters and successfully passed them. All that is now required of Miss Jeacocke is to complete the eight months, that she lost up to the time of the examinations.

On Sunday she got up for a short walk for the first time since she has been confined to bed. She took the opportunity of assuring the numerous friends, that she has received on her fine success.

ALFALFA CROP IS HARD HIT

This winter was harder on some crops than others this section than the record breaking one of one year ago, it is believed by several agriculturists. Their views probably will be swayed by the severe weather of the preceding week, this year it is reported many varieties of fruit trees have been killed in the section. Other crops have also been damaged.

"It is estimated, that over fifty per cent of the alfalfa crop throughout the province was killed," it was stated today by Mr. Jos. Wilson, agricultural representative for this district.

RELIEF FIREMAN PREVENTS BLAZE

Mr. Jack Darvell, probationary and relief fireman of the local department, while on duty Saturday afternoon, recognized a fire, when he saw it. Instead of calling fellow members of the department by fire alarm, he stepped up to a burning car on Front street, Sunday afternoon, and despite the heat and threat of exploding gasoline, calmly disconnected the blazing wires.

Fireman who responded to the alarm sent in by a citizen a minute or two previous, arriving in time to quench the last few sparks.

Alderman Harry Hill, chairman of the department and Chief Lynch today commended Mr. Darvell on the prompt tess with which the new member acted.

MONEY LACKING TO FINISH ISLAND

"What are they going to do about Erick's Island?" questioned a prominent citizen today. "Is the job ever there finished yet?"

According to the local man, now is the time for action and not a few of shrub planting on the island before it becomes so badly weed overgrown that it will almost be impossible to do so. A few man and a few shrubs or trees planted at various locations would work wonders on the island, he points out.

"But we haven't the money to do it with," commented Mayor Geo. C. Tice when questioned this morning. "It would be all right if we were on the same relief system that we were a year ago, but under the present circumstances, it seems out of the question. I don't believe we'll be able to do anything about it this year."

The accused was not asked to plead, his case being enlarged for one month, bail being provided by the accused. A minor theft charge was also disposed of by remand pending previously been made.

ENTRANCE GAINED THROUGH WINDOW

Belleville Creameries Ransacked But Little Taken

Successfully gaining entrance through a rear window, after having been frustrated in their attempt to break and enter Bellerive Creameries through the forcing of the front door, burglars ransacked the building, stole fifty cents and one pound of butter sometime early Sunday morning. Police investigated and found the robbers had first attempted to "jimmy" the front door, later retreating to the rear of the building where entrance was gained through a small window.

Once inside the building the robbers crawled through a small ventilator window into the refrigerator box, where nearly $400.00 had been stored a few days ago, but no money has been left in that department since the last week-end. Unable to find cash in this department, the burglars searched the safe in the private office of Mr. Mackenzie Robertson, proprietor of the Belleville creameries. Drawers and desks were ransacked, but the fifty cents was forthcoming the remainder of the business' receipts being deposited in the bank on Saturday.

At the request of the police, employees made a complete inventory on the stock of butter on hand and found that only one pound had been taken. The burglars used iron bars procured as a railway terminal to pry open the front door, which they gained entrance, leading the authorities to believe the robbery was the work of passing transients, despite the fact the robbers went through practically all the cupboards as did their more successful predecessors, the amount so far, when nearly $500.00 was stolen.

Detective Fred Baird and C. P. P. Constable John Reilly investigated the robbery at the request of Crown Attorney H. D. Denman, K.C. to whom the robbers may be returned by Mr. Robertson early this morning. The following which the officers thoroughly searched the "jungles" in the vicinity of the city. Always running into Belleville without results.

Non-Jury Case Concerns Notations of Late Hon. R. Cooke

Nine cases were on the docket to be presented before the Honorable Mr. Justice Mowbray in the non-jury sitting of the non-jury sittings of the Supreme Court of Ontario in Belleville this afternoon.

The outstanding case to be presented, insofar as local interest is concerned, is the action to determine whether or not certain writings and notations by the late Hon. Rob. Cooke are valid and effective. The case is an action brought on by the Standard Trust Co. of Canada against Wallace and Cooke beneficiaries. The firms of Donnan and Butler and Wallbridge and Chaderton will represent the plaintiffs, while the firm of Porter, Pringle and Porter will represent the defendants.

A damage action for $25,000.00, following a motor accident near Kingston, is entered for trial by Belleville counsel for the action in Kingston against the Imperial Oil Company. Kingston solicitors are representing both sides. The action is said to be brought by Miss Joyner who it claims died as the result of injuries received in a motor accident near Kingston some months ago.

Two divorce cases are also included on the docket, neither being contested.

The first case on the list, Siegel vs. Siegel, is an undefended petition action, a case of assignments of debts. Two other cases will be adjourned at the request of the solicitors engaged. Messrs. O'Flynn and Howell appear in the first, while Jacques case for an adjournment as did the firm of Porter, Payne and Arnold in the Miles vs. Francis action, both being damage actions. All other cases on the docket were cases which were adjourned in other parts of the province and are being tried in Belleville.

"We would have crashed if I hadn't had my new glasses."

A good many of the 750,000 automobile accidents in America every year (resulting in something like 30,000 deaths and 850,000 injuries) are the result of defective vision. Correctly fitted glasses on all drivers would prevent a large percentage of these accidents.

Anyone who drives should, as a matter of precaution, have his eyes examined periodically for defects and changes in his vision.

Your escapes from accidents last year may have been due to luck pure luck. And maybe your last year's eyes were better than your this year's eyes!

Better vision—after driving!

Police Ask Remand in Case of Alleged Assault

Harry Abbott, 59 St. Paul Street, appeared in the local police court before Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., today charged with assaulting actual bodily harm to his wife, Eva Abbott. The accused man was not asked to plead and was remanded in custody until Thursday, his case then to be heard.

Abbott was arrested in his own home, St. Paul Street, about 7 p.m. Saturday night following a call to Pte. Flynn, in answering a call to the Abbott home, found Mrs. Eva Abbott lying on the floor in the kitchen, unconscious. In the house with Mr. and Mrs. Abbott was another man, who gave his name as Charles Jones. Both Abbott and Jones were arrested and charged with intoxication in today's police court, and was released on his liberty until Friday upon his own recognizance.

Mrs. Abbott was removed to the Belleville General Hospital in the city ambulance, while Abbott was taken by local police and placed in the cell block at the police station. While investigating the trouble it was ascertained by some persons that Mrs. Abbott had been struck in the head with a flat iron, which was found lying on the kitchen floor of the home. The flat iron was taken to the police station but is not believed by the authorities to have been used in the scuffle.

According to a statement made to the police, Mrs. Abbott and her husband, his wife, Stevens and two other men had consumed on Saturday the larger portion of six gallons of native wine along with some beer. Abbott informed the police he did not remember what had happened but was of the opinion that a scuffle had occurred in the place. He denied any knowledge of however, police say otherwise. Abbott was found lying near the stove with a long gash in the centre of her forehead and unconscious. She will be discharged from the hospital later today, police officials stated.

During the procedure of the court today Chief Kidd read the charge and asked Magistrate E. J. Butler to enlarge the case without taking a plea from the accused. "We are not actually sure, whether this is an assault case for merely the result of a drunken brawl. We expect to have further details by Thursday," concluded the Chief.

Hit-and-Run Philosophy Of Competition is Attacked By Rev. C.E. Clarke in Sermon

Former Rector of Christ Church Tells of Dual Duty of Church

'BACKWARD LOOK'

"The antidote for pessimism is the look backward look to the very beginning", said the Rev. C. E. Clarke, rector of St. Michael and All Angels' church, Toronto, former rector of Christ Church for over eight years, in his sermon on Sunday morning, at the second Sunday's observance of the seventieth anniversary of Christ Church. Painting the sunset and gloom of the present day, the preacher referred to the exile of seventy years, when Hebrew leaders looked over the plains to the hills of Jerusalem and the graves of their children. To most of the exiles there was no sign of return, the preacher said.

"In the pessimism of this day people wonder whether the sun of night is sinking or is it still dawning the heavens. In Russia they have a colony, one most Christian as far as ritualism goes, in which the church is being destroyed by the government and instead of being Christians the majority of the people are atheistic as ever before. Again Germany, the country peculiarly of the Reformation, has gone away from the thought of Jesus of Nazareth and turning the clock back to Wodan."

Looking at their own continent people find that it is not different for there are more than 2,000,000 who are not only not religious but militantly antagonistic to religion. In Toronto, the preacher said, there are sections where children are taught that there is no God—that the things the churches teach are fairy tales and fables. Christianity is waning, say the pessimists, and they find much to worry them," remarked Mr. Clarke, referring to the financial worries of this day in the church.

Backward Look

"When you feel like that, the antidote is the look backward look to the birth of Christianity. What was the extent of the Christian force—perhaps only a hundred or twenty persons who saw Christ and went out with the story of the Man who had been dead and was alive. They had no power in wealth, they had no building, but they went out to attack the heathen world to win it to Our Master. They turned against them, impiousness then, the Roman Empire and the new religion is not Roman in its entirety, but in spirit, it is strange Hebrew superstition—so that from them underground into the catacombs. Yet persistently without fear of the things we have today, without legal protection because of its living faith conquering the Emperor itself and the world.

"If you are pessimistic at all on this Sabbath day, know that there are thousands and thousands of people the world over who will kneel with you and partake of the Communion of Our Saviour and Christ Jesus. Think of the resources of 1900 years of Christian living and Christian experience.

"Christian congregations, ministers come and go but there is added to the sweep of the Christian centuries.

"The message in this fifth year of the war is the same as we are having war, is the long look backward and the forward look with confidence that God is in His heaven and ultimately into existence through His people. The message is hopeful, but it is tremendously important in value."

Mr. Clarke referred to his pleasant memories of his incumbency in Christ Church, and to the memorials which he had of working in the church. He would be impossible to express to you what the friendship of so many people in this parish has been to me, and the time in it was extended, but for the rest of my life."

Rev. G. G. Wright, rector of Christ Church, introduced Mr. Clarke back to Christ Church parish.

In the chancel during the special anniversary communion service with the Rev. G. G. Wright, who succeeded Mr. Clarke, Mr. C. E. Clarke who assisted with the Rev. A. J. Geen, who attended the congregation of Christ Church more than seventy years ago, before the first church was built near the present bridge and when the people met in what is now Marble Hall.

Competition Blessed

Last evening before a very large congregation, the Rev. Mr. Clarke again preached, paying reference to the large number of men and women who had been trained for Christian life and citizenship in Christ Church and had gone out into the world. "Surely it is no small thing that this church should be privileged over seventy years as a witness to Christ."

New problems or problems with new emphasis face the church today with a world changing in a marvellous way," said the preacher. The church had good as a civilizing force for the English-speaking peoples in the abolition of slavery. The opening up of the Dark Continent, and the abolition and passing of some of the great pieces of legislation which liberated men and children from virtual slavery". This was in the past and now the church must and itself for the task of meeting and answering the new problems.

"Since Darwin's day people have been almost hypnotized by the thought of the survival of the fittest. So we have brought into life, competition, and have held out the hope that it would lead to lower prices of goods. So we have brought this survival of the fittest into the human arena, and thought humanity was marching on to something better.

Hit-and-Run Philosophy

"When we look back we find that this policy is absolutely wrong. It is the hit-and-run philosophy in life. Haven't you seen in the business world this struggle? Don't you know something about 'chiseling in business? One result of the horrible competition is the lowering of the standard of living. The reason why wages are not what they ought to be is because of the hit-and-run philosophy of this which competition, otherwise, do it is with nations. We have been building up civilization for the past two generations on this policy and have brought about the greatest depression in history. Competition has brought us nothing but sour grapes.

"But God is Love or he is not. It is this way—co-operation is the supreme power in the world, not competition. Love means co-operation. Co-operation is the reason for many scientific progress. We have had about enough competition to ruin the world. We are now face with the mad competition and race of armament. The Encyclical of the Pope which is to speak out whether the Nazism or not—that competition is wrong, as it is over lending to a united world we are tending to the necessity of co-operation and the message of the church is 'Co-operate'. Let us not be afraid to let Christ, this is so and tell Mussolini and our leaders that it is so.

The Individual's Duty

"But more than this, the church must remember that every individual soul the necessity of a religious outlook on life." Many are living unhappily, happily, rightly without religion, which means the assurance that back of the world's order there has needed it more than this age."

Mr. Clarke quoted from a psychologist to show that in all his experience people out-of-step with the world's plan could trace their trouble to loss of religious emotions and those had ever been healed who did not have a religious outlook. A superintendent of an asylum stated that religion was the preventive of breakdowns and the cure of recovery.

"We must speak of religion in terms of this generation so that the may understand," he concluded.

Rev. G. G. Wright announced that next Sunday, the preachers would be the Rev. W. G. Swayze of Newdon, in the morning, and Rev. Canon Bigg in the evening.

At the evening service two large brass candlesticks from the altar will be dedicated as memorials by the Bishop.

The boys' choir sang with a portion of the adult choir in an anthem "Now the Day is Over", Master Tommy Hyland taking the solo.

HYDRO SURPLUS SHOWS GROWTH

Local Commission Inquires as to Possibility of Rate Reduction

Belleville Hydro Commissioners today received a letter from Commissioner G. A. Reid, to authorize the secretary manager to write the Ontario Commissioner to "see if Belleville can secure a reduction in rates." The matter was brought to the attention of the Ontario Commissioner, Mr. Reid according to the last information the auditors of the financial statement of the local commission had not been completed and reported upon.

The local Hydro system continues to advance, according to the four months to April 30th, 1935, totalled $228,258.76 as against $221,210.61 the same period last year. The net surplus to April 30th., 1935, was $39,736 as against $37,736 for the first four months of the year 1934. These figures were presented by Secretary Manager O. H. Scott at today's meeting together with a statement of the power peak which reached 2721.07 horsepower in April 1935 as against 2524.05 horsepower in April 1934. This means an increase in peak load of 203.02 horsepower. Mr. Scott also stated that during the other months of this year the peak load was slightly lower than in April.

The estimation of the increase in surplus the manager says in the interim rate was slightly higher last year than the surplus under the flat the surplus this year was over $3,000 up.

The range campaign is proceeding with success, the commission reports.

The Belleville Board decided to write the Ontario Commission of the Ontario Commission discontinuing the monthly rental rate on booster heaters. There are only nine of these in use. There are however, 231 flat rate heaters under the commission plan besides others changing the total well beyond the 400 heater mark.

Commissioner M. P. Dafoe was in the chair and Mayor Geo. C. Tice was present.

Accident Happens on Belleville-Stirling Road

Stirling, May 20.—(Special)—Mrs. Mary Laitone, 93 Bridge Street Stirling, escaped death shortly after eight o'clock this morning, when the car which she was driving left the highway on the Belleville-Stirling Highway near Marsh Creek, about a mile north of this city. TANGLED LIVES

By ANN FORESTER

Why! He'd rather leave it to that red headed girl coming in the door to share with him the money! Sue had as much right to it as that spoiled brat Natalie had! More—she'd given a real friend in that last rainy week. It would mean color and travel for her . . . it would be helping another rebel out of the stale greyness of life. And it would be a delightful joke to play on Cora.

Roger chuckled wickedly to himself at the thought of Cora's chagrin. But the pleasant fancy faded in a fog of regret. Impractical, of course. . . . Cora and Natalie would be his relatives . . . But his mind, that shrewd business mind which had had a lifetime of practice in outguessing other men, was seeing on the thought—dodging this way and that—finding ways and means. . .

Grace, placing his tray on the waiting table looked up in surprise at her patient's chuckle. Found his eyes bright and malicious, fastened upon her.

"Want to talk to you," he said abruptly. "Never mind food— this is more important. Close the door and come here and listen."

When Joyce had compiled, old Roger spoke, keen eyes closely watching her changing expression.

"Remember what you said this morning? About little things changing a person's life? Well, here's one of those little things—" He threw Cora's cablegram to her. "Read it".

When she had lifted wide violet eyes again to the last word, he went on.

"All my life that woman's bossed me. She's coming here to finish the job. She's after my money. . . Well, she's not going to get it.

Roger Cameron's hard stare took in, for a moment, the girl's still figure. The light which fell from the window outlined her hair in a halo of light, outlined the tender curve of her cheek and slender neck. The old man's eyes dwelt on the beauty of her, avidly, as a blind man suddenly made to see. Then there was so much of beauty and color he must see in the short time left—!

"At first I thought I'd leave it to you," he went on. "That's no good. She'd beat the will legally. There are no other relatives. I've been lying here, thinking—and it's been queer thinking. But a man does that sort of thinking when he's placed in the position I'm in now. But first—look here, you don't think I'm crazy, do you?"

"Why, no!" Joyce was astonished. "And you wouldn't think it a romantic old fool—now would you?"

She started to laugh. Quickly sobered again at his fierce demanding eyes, "No."

"Then, that being settled, I want you to be serious about this, and try and get my viewpoint. I've talked a pretty good deal to you in the last few days. You're not content here. You want travel and a chance to see the world, you want the pleasure of spending money, having pretty things, you want color—well, so do I. You can have all that, if you marry me. What do you say?"

CHANGING FATE

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

In the moment which followed astonishment deprived Joyce of speech or action.

"Don't get me wrong," went on the old man's dry, crisp voice. "There's no sentimental tosh about this. I'm no old fool in his dotage, thinking he's fallen in love with a girl young enough to be his daughter. I'm just taking a means of escape, and I'm giving you a way out, too. And this proposal— if you can call it that, is business pure and simple. It won't be a marriage in the usual sense of the word. It's a legal arrangement, that I can get out from under Cora's thumb, and I'll be able to leave you the money when I'm gone—leave it to you tied up high and dry Cora won't stand a look in."

"Why . . .why . . . I—I don't know what to say . . . I'm astounded."

"Then listen a bit, while I talk," snapped the man. "You want to travel. So do I. I'm going to see this world while I live. It may be a week—a year—maybe longer, it's God's will alone. But my will is to see God's world while I'm here. And I'm going to get some good out of my money while I can, and when I'm gone I want someone to have it beside Cora, Natalie and her daughter. They're comfortably provided now —they don't need my money."

In times of emotion Joyce always grew pale. She was colorless now. Her eyes seemed almost black in her chalky face. The old man looked at her shrewdly.

"Then you off your feet, haven't I? Well, I suppose it is a bit staggering. But I couldn't lead up to it easier. You see, I've got to act fast. Cora's started—" tapping the cablegram which lay on the bed beneath his withered hand. "She'll be here in a week. Two weeks at most. I've got to get my affairs in order, and I'm not a young man. Every man's got some weak point—I've got two. Cora's now big he is in the business world. Always mine. I suppose I formed the habit of being afraid of her, and it's an inhibition that's grown with the years. I was never a man for women. Once there was a girl —" he moved restlessly, "oh, well, no need to go into that. Cora broke it up anyway. . . . The point is—I've got a softening of his voice, there was a softening of his voice, a business competitor knew to his sorrow—the point is, I'm going to beat Cora this time, I'm giving you the chance to get something of what you want out of life."

A moment when the girl did not move. A moment while the old man continued to regard her with keen eyes.

"I might add," he went on, and there was a softening of his voice, "that I like you. I like your spirit. I was something like you when I was young. Maybe you don't entirely dislike me?"

"I like you," Joyce said softly, and for a second she fought back the tears in her eyes, "I like you better than I ever liked any one in my life except Kitty. I don't like many people—"

"Who's Kitty?"

Joyce told him. Told him fully and simply about her friendship with Kitty. Told him of Nadine, and of that strange half-world life that she had grazed.

The old man listened, motionless except for his bright, devouring eyes. When she had finished, he spoke.

"I was going to tell you that I would take a nurse along. We'd travel—that is, if you accept the proposition. Maybe this girl—you would go along. She'd be a companion to you then, as well. We'll go anywhere—everywhere—seeing the world, no matter what it costs. Thinking hardship and trouble were before . . . Oh, well . . . You'd really be a daughter to me. I'd leave it that way, but it wouldn't do. The world would never believe the world's like that, Joyce."

Her name sounded so odd on Roger Cameron's lips that Joyce jumped, nervously. The old man saw it. "Not more excited, eh? Well, that has been a surprise to you. You aren't used to making business decisions quickly. Think it over. Tell me tonight what you decide. But remember—I have to be fast! Cora's on her way here."

Roger closed his eyes, as a sign that the interview was ended.

Joyce went quietly from the room. She found that she was trembling as she walked down the corridor, and she went about her other duties in a daze which won her a sour look from the superintendent of nurses.

It was twilight when Joyce went back into her own room, which she shared with Kitty. The small bare space was thick with shadows, and she could hear the cold drip of rain in the court outside the window.

Joyce flung herself on her narrow bed and buried her face in the pillows. She had wanted to think this astonishing proposition over calmly —very judiciously. Instead she found her mind a maze of drifting pictures.

Old Roger's keen, ugly face and his crisp voice . . . Something pathetic about him. Cheating of life —he was turning to her like a small boy, asking her to show him how to play . . . For a moment the difference in their ages was forgotten. Joyce felt far older and wiser than he . . . His wife . . . Well, the other women had married for money, and for some reason, so cleanly. . . . What a strange thing was what a tremendous thing to happen to her! Marriage—marriage when she had thought of it, had meant Norman. Had meant a rush of sweet passion through her blood. That was over—over and dying not even pain in its wake. Just great dreariness.

Joyce was still lying face downward, tense and thinking, when Kitty came in dancingly.

No doubt Kitty was in a rage! Her face was red with anger. Her blue eyes were snapping. Her hair flung her fingers through her grey cigarette case, a package as she delivered herself of this: "I've got to change the diet on 201 and push the blame on me Joyce, I'm going to clear out of here. I can't stand it! A person has some pride. I'm going to get out—"

Joyce had swung to a sitting position, and through the thick fog she looked over at Kitty's dark figure and blazing features.

The moment was forever stamped on her memory. The rain, half light filling the room with shadows, the gleaming cold high lights on the hair white dresses. The drip of the rain in the court—unbearably repressing . . . unbearable . . .

Joyce heard herself speaking in a light voice which she did not recognize.

"Want to go away with me, Kitty? Away, to the end of the world, Shanghai—Borneo—Italy— All those places that have always been nothing but names to us? To have leisure things to wear—and travel. . . . Want to, Kitty?"

She could see the red flash of Kitty's cigarette as the woman took it from her lips to speak.

"Don't kid me, Joy, I'm fed up."

"So am I, Kitty. I didn't know how fed up until you came in just now. I don't know how it's happened that I've made up my mind for me. It will come I'll—I'll do it."

"Do what? What are you talking about?"

"Marry Mr. Cameron," said Joyce quietly.

Kitty's cigarette dropped to her lap. She picked it up absently. Joyce felt the eyes boring through the dark.

"Marry him! Why why—"

"He asked me to just now. It isn't really marriage, and yet it is . . . It's legal, of course . . ." Briefly Joyce retailed their conversation to Kitty. The older woman had flown over to her bed now, and was sitting with an arm tight around the girl's trembling form.

"I came down here and tried to think," Joyce finished in a voice that shook. "I couldn't think—and then just came in. Oh Kitty," her voice broke. "What shall I do—tell me the right thing—"

"Do!" said Kitty expressively. "There just one thing to do."

Half an hour later Joyce went up to Room 302. Roger Cameron was sitting up, wrapped in a grey flannel robe.

His gaze was bright and inquiring as Joyce came in, but he spoke no word.

The girl was white but her words came clear and firm. "I came to tell you, I'll accept that proposition, Mr. Cameron." Then, impulsively as a child, she added in a little broken whisper "I'll try to be good . . . "

THE WEDDING

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

She was through with love, Joyce told herself. Love was only a fancy —a mirage.

She had thought she Loved Norman. Once there were thought of him had sent a sweet ardent fire sweeping through her. Now, all she felt was a flash of pity for that deluded girl she had been. The golden dreams—the heartaches— all lies. Lies which life tricks one into trapping . . .

Well, she would not be tricked again. Her heart was not going to rule her. She was going to rule her heart. How she knew that Norman had really represented to her a means of escape from the dull drudgery of life. Well, she was escaping again—but this time her eyes were open.

This Joyce to herself, as she lay in the darkness of the night before the wedding, ticking down the little secret of cold truth in her heart.

Well, she would not be tricked again. Her heart was not going to rule her. She was going to rule her heart. How she knew that Norman had really represented to her a means of escape from the dull drudgery of life. Well, she was escaping again—but this time her eyes were open.

This Joyce to herself, as she lay in the darkness of the night before the wedding, ticking down the little secret of cold truth in her heart.

In a few days which slipped after that talk with Roger Cameron, she had the sensation of moving through some queer and not entirely pleasant dream. Kitty, Joyce saw, she followed the orders of Roger Kitty's nurse with precision. Well, she had like a distracted hen, packing her few belongings into a battered old trunk. Kitty, Joyce knew, was resigning her job, and giving her room to Cora—a piece of her mind at the same time.

Roger had advised Joyce to leave the hospital and go to a small hotel nearby for the three days which preceded the wedding.

"This will cover your expenses," he handed her a generous check as he spoke, "and you'll have a chance to get yourself some clothes. Just whatever you'll need for immediate use. We'll pick up other things later in London and Paris you'll like that, won't you? But get some-thing pretty for now."

Joyce understood him, as she was to understand him so often without words. His imagination, warped most of his life, was newly awakened and seeking beauty. To old man was delighting in the idea of her, as a child delights in a new bright toy.

With the entranced Kitty, Joyce went shopping for clothes. Strange, to be buying in the stores like this, without thought of expense. To be selecting lovely individual gowns and hats and fineries—things. She chose a chiffon dress of misty grey for her wedding gown. A smart top coat of gray with platinum fox collar. A small French hat which turned abruptly off her face to show the delicate outline of her profile and the intense relief and fire of her suspicion of bright hair to steam on the sides. She revelled in selecting exquisitely made shoes—she had hated the cheap shoes which she had always worn.

She bought the bewildered and delighted Kitty a black lace crepe ensemble and a smart black coat and hat. To the older women's objections she said "It's nothing. It is not keeping me from getting things for you. You'll come to Paris I'll pick up some things—"

Joyce found herself wondering, stirring in the back of her mind what was herself speaking so calmly about buying clothes in Paris! That was the girl who had sewed at night on the white crepe dress to wear for Norman's homecoming. That was the dreamer of the Commercial House—not the hospital. . . Bewildering—life! Gorgeous, the patterns the kaleidoscope of living. . . .

Roger Cameron left the hospital by leaning on a steadying arm the old man had with him slowly, almost erect by this time. The stroke showed itself only in his halting gait, and in the sharp facial lines drawn of the muscles on the left side of his face which gave his eyelid a faint droop, and twisted his mouth slightly so that though he tasted some excellent joke in private.

The illness which had slowed his body appeared to have speeded up his mind. Hurry! Hurry! Get everything done before death came to interrupt him. Hurry! Hurry! Snatch handfuls of color and happiness from life before death came.

He took rooms in the old fashioned hotel where he always stayed when he visited the city on business. Here he began to wind up his business affairs preparatory to taking a long trip. To the world at large he simply gave out that the doctors had ordered a sea voyage after his illness. But he sent to Riverton for his old friend, Lloyd Weaver, who had been his attorney at his life, and had him draw up his will and put his personal affairs in order.

SEA FRONTIERS ARE REINFORCED

Reported France Moving Naval Strength to North Sea

(By Charles Foley)

Copyright, 1935, by The Associated Press

Paris, May 20.—France was reliably reported today to be reinforcing her sea frontiers as well as her outposts on land and to be quickly moving her naval strength toward the North Sea from the Mediterranean.

The move corresponds with France's action in transferring thousands of troops from the Italian frontier to her fortifications on the German border after Reich announced her rearmament policy and France-Italian friendship was sealed in the Rome accord.

Within the past six months, the navy's second squadron, responsible for protection of the coast from the North Sea to the Gulf of Gascogne, has been more than doubled in size. There are indications the strength of the squadron will be still further augmented after the naval manoeuvres of Morocco the first two weeks in June.

Last fall France's west coast fleet consisted of one cruiser, two divisions of destroyers, and a squadron of submarines. Since November there have been added one battleship, two new destroyers and four torpedo boats.

In addition 25 submarines have been returned to the fleet. The submarine squadron admiral who operates from the depot ron has been put under the command of a ship Jules Zorma.

White Space Profits FOR SALE

. . . If You Run A Business, This Message Is For You

YOU, as a business man, are interested in profits. We, as a newspaper, are interested in helping you get them. We believe that furnishing profit-building ideas to make our white space more valuable to you is one of the biggest jobs we can do.

No one knows better than we do that no two advertising problems are precisely alike. But long experience has given us a very wide understanding of the buying habits of people who read newspapers. And so every selling idea The Ontario Intelligencer offers you has been given the same test: Has it sold goods to newspaper readers or hasn't it? This testing saves you money. It avoids wasted effort. It lowers your year-round selling cost.

"RED INK" ERA PASSING

The "red ink era is ending", "we are slowly emerging from the quagmire," says Max Myers of Cleveland. "This should be a year in which at least we may not have to swallow enough red ink to hurt us, and there is a possibility of landing slightly over the line."

The same feeling of confidence in the upward trend is manifested by business men in Belleville, by those who dealing with the consumer realize that money is somewhat more easy, and that there is a feeling of optimism, as well as by those others who are brought in contact with business in the larger centres of Canada and the United States. Mr. J. O. Herity Industrial Commissioner, who has returned from a tour in the interests of industry relates evidences which he saw in the past few days of the trend and quotes business figures to show how business is reviving.

THE LAST STAND

The exact spot where Leonidas last stood with his Spartans to defend the pass of Thermopylae, to save Greece from extermination by the Persian hordes, has been located by a German and a French archeologist. The site of the battle of Thermopylae has long been known but the exact spot where the "battalion of death" heroes backed at the invaders until the last of them fell was not known. Now the hill on which the last stand was made has been definitely established. Readers of Greek history will now be able to conjure up pictures of that gallant fight to the death. They gave their lives to Greece and death and won imperishable renown.

FIRST APPENDIX OPERATION

Dr. Groves of Fergus has gone to his rest with a record of having performed the first operation for removal of diseased appendix in North America. Since that time millions of operations have been performed and millions of lives saved.

Those who lived a century ago could not have guessed the extent to which the race was subject to the malady of appendicitis. They could not have realized that many of those who died before the first appendix operation might have been saved to health and long life had the method of operation been known. Myriads had died of appendicitis before the first doctor essayed to use the knife for the removal of the diseased vermiform appendix.

This one operation alone gives a glimpse of the new life which is opened up by the advance of surgery, anaesthetics and research. What they and other branches of the medical art will yet accomplish for the race is nothing but a vision, but a vision full of the brightest hope. Man has but to think of the incessant work of research which is going on in laboratories all over the world with devoted scientists sacrificing themselves to the task of discovery and truth.

THE UNDEFEATED STARLING

Ontario interests detrimentally affected by the vast flocks of starlings that are now evident throughout the province are again contemplating measures of war on these destructive birds.

Reference to this menace has been made in the Legislature, and it was suggested that the use of poison gas might be resorted to in an effort to exterminate the invaders. That proposal is not meeting with favor. While it might sound feasible to use this destructive agency and make short work of the pests, there would be serious danger to human being in this weapon. Some experiments were made last year by a chemical firm which had manufactured a poison gas supposed to be particularly adaptable for use against starlings. The Ontario Department of Agriculture, however, was not impressed in this regard and does not propose to use it again.

It is said that there are five million starlings in the city of Toronto alone, and country districs are proportionately afflicted. Last year traps that had been recommended by the Department of Agriculture were tried in the Niagara fruit district and it is said that good results were achieved. It is recorded that one trap in the Vineland area accounted for 2,600 starlings. Nevertheless warfare on the limited scale indicated by this result is a slow process when the number of the birds is taken into account. They are multiplying much more rapidly than was the case a few years ago and they have spread westward as far as Alberta.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

THOUGHTS ON WAKING

Gold of the sun, blue of the sky,
Plumes of the white clouds drifting by;
Incense of honeysuckle sprays,
Breath of the roses from garden ways,
Larks' notes, clear as a mountain lake
Greet me while yet I am half awake.

Gold of the sun, blue of the sky,
Wings of a cruising butterfly,
Thoughts still hazy, still drugged by sleep
Only a little of this I keep,
Senses too drowsy to catch and clasp
All of the beauty within their grasp.

Gold of the sun, blue of the sky,
Wind that is weaving a melody,
Wooing me back from the halls of dream,
Wings a-flutter and sky a-gleam,
Ah, it is blessed to wake and find
Earth so smiling and skies so kind!

CANADIAN SPORTS WEEK is now an established institution, this year marking the ninth annual celebration, from May 18 to 25. This is an effort of sport lovers to focus attention on the fact that "It Pays to Play." Visitors from the Old Land frequently remark that in this new country we have not learned to play. Overseas they have learned that playtime is necessary to promote efficient worktime. John Galsworthy says this tribute to sport:

"Sport which still keeps the flag of idealism flying, is perhaps the most saving grace in the world at the moment, with its spirit of rules kept, and regard for the adversary, whether the fight is going for or against. When, if ever, the spirit of sport, which is a spirit of fair play, reigns over international affairs, the cat force, which rules there now, will slink away and human life emerge for the first time, from the jungle."

"It Pays To Play" is the slogan of the sport world, pays not only in dollars and cents, but in the gaining of qualities and standard which cannot be reduced to the scale of mercenary measurement.

And so if all work and no play makes Jack Canuck a dull boy—let's learn to play in a better and brighter way.

So wrote Robert Browning who had eyes to see the wonders of Nature unfolded at the springtime, and ears to appreciate the wonderful music of Nature, the accompaniment of growing time with the birds and the bees and the breeze in the trees swelling the grandest chorus ever heard.

AIRPLANE AND THE BUZZARD

An airplane hummed through the clearing sky
With the grace and poise of a butterfly.
A buzzard lolled in the vaulted blue
And glided aside as the plane went through.
"Old man," said the plane, "the like of you Should hide away and keep out of view."
The buzzard said nothing but circled away
And the plane returned the following day.
It sputtered and coughed and finally sank
To a wretched heap on a river bank.
The buzzard, on watch from a near-by tree,
Said, "Man made you and God made me,"
And the homely bird that could not sing
Flew down and perched on a crumpled wing.

A County Kerry man, newly landed in the States, was taking his first walk up Sixth Avenue under escort of his brother, who had been living there several years. In the window of a delicatessen store he saw a great mound of fresh cranberries.

"What are thim?" he asked.

"Thim is cranberries," said his brother. "Are they fit to eat?"

"Are they fit to eat?" repeated his brother. "Why whin thim cranberries is stewed they make better applesauce than prunes does."

Road, Rail and Water Transport Thrive on Motor Trade

GENERAL MOTORS CARS ON THEIR WAY TO CANADIAN AND OVERSEAS MARKETS

By rail, water and highway, the cars of General Motors leave for the Canadian market and buyers in distant parts of the world. General Motors estimates that the many thousands of carloads of rail shipments will mean a freight revenue this year to Canada's railroads of $2,622,500. Steamship carriings, too, are light and "roaders" and highway transports will earn $300,000 delivering new cars via the highways. SCOTT'S SCRAPBOOK

LAWRENCE OF ARABIA SUCCUMBS TO INJURIES

Changed Name to Shaw

All the boys' names, that were possible links for his new service he had declined. He changed his name to Shaw in 1922, gave up his rank as Colonel and became a private in the Royal Air Force. Only a few months ago he retired from army service, Hoping to find obscurity in a small cottage in the Dorset Moors.

He was educated at Oxford. In student days he went to the Near East to pursue studies. He went to Syria, adopted native costume, and covered hundreds of miles, living with Bedouin tribes.

In 1916 he joined an Oxford expedition under Leonard Woolley which was searching in the Euphrates Valley in search of Hittite relics. When war broke out he was engaged in the same work.

He enlisted and eventually got to the Near East. Near Cadesh he met Feisal, young Arab prince and the two began the drive that eventually ran the Turk from Arabia. Finally the victorious Arabs marched into Damascus. Later Lawrence attended the peace conference, was bitterly disappointed because Britain refused support his promises of independence for the Arabs. He received no medal, however in placing Feisal on the throne of Iraq.

(By The Canadian Press)

Strange combination of master strategist and studious scholar, unparalleled guerilla fighter and poet and author, was the career that led Lawrence to become a legendary hero while he yet lived.

For the first two years of the Great War an obscure figure, he worked behind the scenes to fan into the flame of revolt against the Turk in Arabia, a people ripe on the verge of failure this lean ascetic-featured man with unbounded energy took to the desert. He united fierce factions long at daggers drawn in a fighting combination that was to prove ultimately successful.

Peace found this idealist disillusioned, bitter at the outcome of the intrigue play of, international diplomacy of the Independent nations he had been led to promise them. He sought retirement and failed to find the privacy he loved.

Ironically enough his own almost morbid dislike of personal notice was largely responsible for the fantastic tales that grew up around "Lawrence of Arabia" continually in the world's headlines while the one-time desert campaigner labored in lowly rank under assumed name in postwar years. And the man who refused his life time and again in war and peace, was brought to death's door in May, 1935, by an accident on a country road in quiet old Dorsetshire.

Refused Honors.

Lawrence refused all honors and rank for his services except that of Colonel, accepted during the war to help maintain prestige with his Arab comrades, chief of whom was the Emir Feisal, son of King Hussein, of the Hejaz. He assumed the name of T. E. Shaw and enlisted in the R.A.F. in 1923. Publicity led him to transfer quietly into the tank corps, but in 1928 he was back in the R.A.F. and from 1929 was transferred to India. Wherever there was trouble, there was a report that "Lawrence of Arabia" had something to do with, regardless of his whereabouts, and he returned to England, serving as Aircraftsman Shaw at Plymouth until his retirement in 1933.

In the meantime he had spent four years on a translation of the immortal Arbiyan into English verse, a work hailed by the world's scholars. Years before he had written "The Seven Pillars of Wisdom," his own story of the Arab revolt—re-written after he had lost the original 400,000 word manuscript, in a railway station. Only a few copies of this were ever printed and they came to command rich prices. He was persuaded to permit the publication of a greatly abridged version, "Revolt in the Desert", and it remains the best account of that remarkable desert campaign which not only freed Arabia from the Turk but was indispensable to the conquest of Palestine by General Marshal Lord Allenby—to whom Lawrence showed the way into Damascus.

Lawrence himself gives the best understanding of the time he had in Arabia. "Arabs could be swung on an idea as on a cord," he wrote, "for the unpleasant allegiance of their minds made them obedient servants. None of them would escape the bond till success came, and with it responsibility and duty and engagements. Then the idea was gone and the work ended—in ruins. . . . Since the days of Ur's ancestors waves may had been dashing themselves against the coasts of the flesh.

"One such wave (and not the least) I raised and rolled before the breath of an idea, till it reached the crest and toppled over and fell at Damascus. The wash of that wave will provide the matter of all the following waves, when in full-ness of time the sea shall be raised once more."

Mystery Man

Bernard Shaw in 1927 described Lawrence as "the mystery man, the wonder man. . . who authentically and unquestionably in his own way dealt with his own hands exploded and mashed the Turkish dominion in Arabia, and joined up with Viscount Allenby (the redeemer of Palestine) in Damascus at the head of an Arabia liberated, allied to Britannia just when Britannia wanted her."

Lawrence, then known as Shaw, was pursuing his duties in India in 1928 when reports circulated that he was moving about in disguise stirring Baldwhi agitation. He was also reported watching the Pan-Asiatic congress called by Amanullah of Afghanistan at Kabul, where an uprising later cost Amanullah his throne. Shaw were denied by Lawrence's representatives in London and by government officials at such tales persisted, and he was recalled.

Within a year the Cairo native press had Lawrence conferring "in disguise" with the Arabs, called closer in the House of Commons, the Communist Saklatvala—such was the magic of the name of Lawrence—suggested Lawrence was engage din unrest in the Northwest Frontier while amused quoted as "Aircraftsman Shaw" in England. Again the government was constrained to deny the stories. Lawrence, it was explained, was "on leave" and home because such reports were causing embarrassment to the British Minister in Afghanistan whence even then British residents were being evacuated.

In 1930, the Moscow government published indictments in connection with the "trial" of sixty Russian engineers for alleged counter-revolutionary activities in which Lawrence was named with prominent persons in other countries including Sir Austen Chamberlain, Briand of France—as engaged in a secret international plot to overthrow the Soviet regime. The reports met with laughter but once more the government had to issue a official denial.

Lawrence's name was concerned—

"Isn't it true," Lady Astor asked in the house in that occasion, "that Shaw is leading a perfectly quiet and respectable life?"

The answer was lost in a storm of laughter that greeted a Labor member's retort: "That is more than you are doing."

Earlier in 1930 there were vague reports Lawrence was on a "flying tour" in Syria, Turkey and Iraq. Lawrence all this time was pursuing the duties of a private in the Mountbatten seaplane station of the R.A.F. at Plymouth, where his fellow soldiers were forbidden to refer to him as Lawrence or to mention Arabia to him.

Helped In Rescue

Within a few months Lawrence was in the headlines again. Despite the secrecy of the military enquiry it was revealed he played a prominent part in the rescue of survivors in a seaplane crash at Plymouth in which nine men lost their lives. Lawrence, as always, remained silent.

December, 1933, and once again the story of the desert revolt was rehashed to embellish scanty reports that "Aircraftsman Shaw" had originated a daring stunt designed to increase the efficiency of British bombing planes guns. This consisted of piloting specially built fast 40-foot speedboats for plane target practice. Shaw showed how this could be worked, with a crew of three in a speed boat, and then trained a small but efficient crew. Shaw took charge of two-hour runs during which bombs—dummies, but heavy and loaded with gas—rained down anywhere from 1,500 to 10,000 in the air.

Right in the cottage in lovely Dorset, the country of Thomas Hardy and Wesser novels, where he sought peace after service in India in the R.A.F., publicity pursued him. Photographers encountered Grecian words on a stone tablet above the door which, they translated, meant blumity, "Don't bother me."

Lawrence was born in Wales, August 15, 1888, of a Leicestershire family, the second of five sons. He studied at Oxford High School and then Jesus College, Oxford, where he took a first class in modern history in 1910.

Lawrence never married.

Lawrence gained his first intimate knowledge of Arabia during the years just before the war. He toured Syria on foot after graduation, learned colloquial Arabic and then pursued his thirst for archaeological knowledge and in accompanied D. G. Hogarth on an expedition to Carchemish on the Euphrates. On this site or Carchemish he worked intermittently until 1914, between times exploring Syria and Mesopotamia in native company. He showed in these early exploits that remarkable combination of practicality and romance which gave him leadership with scholarship and a genius for imparting it and confidence that accounted for his later success.

Lawrence, below standard height, on the outbreak of the war was admitted into a post in the geographical section of the war office. He was sent by Kitchener to Egypt however soon after Turkey's entrance into the war and there quickly became the moving spirit in negotiations leading to the Arab uprising. In 1916 he was staff and intelligence officer for the campaign, but back in the Arab bureau he had organized. The campaign went badly, while Lawrence found himself in more and more difficulty with his superiors. Chafing, he sought leave and went off to see what he could—do.

Wins Confidence

"The fatalistic subordination of a professional soldier," he wrote in the Seven Pillars has been unknown in the British army, would have made a proper officer sit down and watch his plan of campaign wrecked by men who brought nothing of it and to whom spirit it made no appeal." That was not Lawrence's way.

His first step was to win the confidence of Feisal, the Arab leader in the field who had sustained a series of reverses. He traversed the northern desert to rally the tribes and extend the area to be defended against the Turks. He went right behind the enemy lines in Syria, pleading threatening, flattering. On his return he raised a Turkish battalion near Maan and forced a passage to Akaba on the shore of the Red Sea. Feisal occupied it in August 1917.

Now cordially helped by Allenby who had "taken over" in Palestine, Lawrence's plans for further operations were needed. Lawrence set out to "get" the Turks at every turn and he succeeded. Blown-up bridges, captured trains, raids on Turkish posts continued until at last Feisal and Hess the enemy suffered its worst defeat in the open. Allenby, with a stronghold since 1875, was isolated. In 1918 he began his drive to the northwest of margins to cut the vital line of communication with the Turkish headquarters in Damascus.

Organized New Force

In the summer of 1918, now working, threatening, flattering. On his could ever work with anybody, he formed a mobile Arabian force and advance on Damascus, a move that carried out side by side with Allenby's forces in Palestine. The advance turned into a rout of the Turks and Lawrence reached Damascus ahead of the British regulars, being the city and suppressing reaction until Allenby's arrival.

Undoubtedly Lawrence considered the peace negotiations, then and afterwards, among the most disappointing days of his career, if indeed he would admit he had a career. He accompanied Feisal on a tour in Britain and to Paris, but he could not prevail against the assembled diplomats and French indifference on their own plans for Syria, and he retired to write his memoirs.

In 1919 he was back in old Oxford, where he was elected a research fellow of All Souls and decided there until in 1921 he agreed to enter the colonial office as an adviser on Arab affairs. In this period he was probably largely instrumental in making Feisal King of Iraq. But he was unconsoled, and in 1922 he abruptly left official service, remaining hiden until he joined the R.A.F. in the following year.

Lawrence's pledge to the Arab allies cropped up in 1929 at Jerusalem. At an enquiry into disorders in Palestine the Grand mufti, head of the Arabs there, introduced a letter he said to have been signed by Balfour in 1918, addressed to Hussein, in which the statement, said with pledge of independence. For the Arabs given by Lawrence would be fulfilled. The Arab representative alleged failure to fulfil this was the underlying cause of the disturbance. Balfour was silly,-died in 1934.

New York, May 20.—I met Lawrence in 1918 when he came to England for the peace conference. He came with Amir Feisal, who was representing his father, King Hussein of the Hejaz. That was the beginning of an association between us which lasted throughout the rest of his life.

He came to London to spend the day with me less than two months ago.

Although we had corresponded frequently I had not seen him since 1921. I published his magnificent translation of the Odyssey in 1932. I got him to start this in 1877. It is now ready for publication as the foremost translation.

I last went before he came to see me in London I had gone to visit him in his cottage in Dorset. His neighbors told me photographers and reporters had besieged him for interviews and pictures which he refused to grant. When he came to see me in London he told me he had had no peace since leaving the army service.

Loved England

I asked him on that visit about his plans and it now seems tragic to recall that he answered, "Well, I figure that I have 20 good years of life ahead of me and I'm going to spend them in my cottage with my books and exploring the English countryside on my bike."

He expressed for years an inexpressible love for England.

In 1927 he wrote me from Karachi, India: "I had the most delightful memories for me and I begrudge every hour of my existence away from England, where only I feel at home.

"This is my 15th year abroad but I had to ask the airforce to put me on foreign service for the philanthropic duties in connection with "Revolt in the desert" would have rendered my life intolerable and my presence a crushed nuisance to my commanding officer, in any station in England.

"O I am exiled till the ruse about my book has died down in the press."

I proposed in London that he came to America to visit me and see some of the country.

He said, "No, I haven't time. There's too much of England I want to see before I die. You who dash about England in motorcars never get to know the hearty and peace of the byways. In them I shall lose my bad memories of the Raid."

I think that his death is an incalculable loss, for I believe that in a crisis in the east, where he believed immunet, he would have been the man of the hour.

He seemed to me a great length of his fear that the Italian-Abyssinian trouble might precipitate a great religious war. He felt that that would be far more dangerous than any European conflict might be.

Most Simple of People

Knowing and appreciating fully his remarkable qualities and genius, I like to think of him as an enthusiastic young man. He was more if any, men who have achieved equal success in such various and opposite directions.

His achieved greatness as a scholar, as a soldier, and as an artist.

There have been four biographies published about him during his life. He was the most simple of people, sympathetic, spontaneous, without affectation. But he was incredibly shy with strangers.

The last time I saw him he said to me—we had been speaking of women—"About men and friendships, only honest, few women are. Their emotions are too strong and varied for anyone but him to hold to any absolute honesty."

I believe that with all his achievements in other lines he will in the appraisal of posterity rank as most highly celebrated as an artist and I know that would be his main hope.

He once said of the Arabian episode, "I look upon what I did in Arabia as morally indefensible and I only ask to be forgotten by my friends."

But his friends will never forget him.

He gave his life, in the end, as a gallant soldier in saving a life. We will not see his like again.

BUSINESS URGED TO STUDY MAN

Solution of Economic Problems Seen by Stevens

Ottawa, May 20.—While marvellous strides had been made in the development of industry in the way of increasing its efficiency nevertheless many social problems which were the product of poverty and efficiency remained unsolved, Hon. H. H. Stevens, former Minister of Trade and Commerce, declared in an address here. If the same study and zeal in facilitating industrial progress had been applied to the problems so developed, conditions would not be what they are.

It was man's sacred right to have a decent living, said Mr. Stevens. He referred to the work-camps established for single unemployed men. Was it reasonable, he asked, to have young men to go into these camps for three years, receive food, shelter and clothing, plus $5 a month, and expect them to be contented and happy?

"What sort of a country would we have if the standards set for our young men are these?"

Yet there were thousands living on that standard and, said Mr. Stevens, he ventured to say at least 20 per cent. were university graduates.

"We ask them to have patience, to practice forbearance of fortitude. It is a surprise to me to see them as contented as they are."

Some people were suggesting the old order was returning. "Those times." His own conviction was there would never be a return to good times. He thought, however, that, with necessary readjustments and revisions of our industrial and economic situation, there would be a "progress" to better conditions, but not back to conditions which brought about the collapse of 1929.

Mr. Stevens attacked the general idea that the stock market was a "barometer of business." It would be better if financial pages were cut out of the newspapers altogether for a time so that men might judge of conditions by actual events rather than by the reactions of stock gambling.

Turning to labor, the ex-Minister said the time had passed when labor could be treated as a commodity. Employers should remember their obligations to the human element, and impress themselves with the fact that they were "their brother's keeper."

"Labor that gives its service is entitled to a fair return for those services," said Mr. Stevens, "that is fundamental and if you have not that, you have not a healthy society."

ONE RECAPTURED AFTER JAIL BREAK

Alleged Bandit, One of Those Escaping at Kingston

Kingston, May 20.—(CP)— Three prisoners escaped from Frontenac County jail here early Sunday, and two are still at liberty.

Leo Dionne, 31 years old, first arrested Wednesday in connection with a service station robbery, was recaptured half an hour after the break, as he was getting into a punt at the foot of Barrack Street. He had a hacksaw with him.

Squads of police were searching the district for Archibald Hyatt, 31, originally of Chatham, and Bernard Leavey, 26, the other two who escaped.

The three made their getaway over the jail wall after a brief battle with Turnkey Reid. All were recaptured by Hyatt, who was released from Kingston Penitentiary May 3, and was fighting extradition to the United States, where he is wanted for escaping from Virginia State Penitentiary.

Smash Lever Off Door

In Hyatt's cell the two smashed the lever off the door by jamming a bench against it, and got out in the corridor. The two went upstairs without being seen and pried the lever off the door of the cell occupied by Bernard Leavey, releasing him.

The three were in the corridor when Turnkey Reid entered to let a prisoner who acts as orde go to the kitchen to prepare breakfast. The three jailbreakers brushed past Reid, Dionne armed with a club and Hyatt, it is alleged carrying an iron lever from one of the cell doors. Reid fought with Dionne and got the club away from him but the other two managed to get Dionne away. They went out the main door leading to the cells and shut it against Reid.

The log, northeast corner of the jail-yard was a pile of tile manufactured by the prisoners. On the pile was a 2-foot plank. The plank reached within three feet of the top of the wall, and the men used it to scale the wall. They jumped down to the roof of a garage and escaping from that along West St.

The turnkey raised an alarm; but the three prisoners were out of sight.

Caught Getting Into Punt

Three constables of the squad who began an immediate search of the city, found Dionne getting into a punt off the end of Barrack Street. He is thought to have been about to start rowing to a nearby steamer.

Leavey, who with Hyatt is still being hunted by police, was arrested at Barrifield May 6, for violating parole, and was awaiting removal to Ontario Reformatory, At Ottawa Feb. 19, 1933, he had been sentenced to 24 months determinate and 12 months indeterminate for Orefi. Dionne, whose home is in Lower Dundas, was arrested near Napanee Wednesday after an all-day hunt by the police for two men who held up Merle Polk of the Cities Service gasoline station on Bath Road. Polk was robbed of $50 and a watch. Wilfred Lilley, also of Cornwall was arrested with Dionne. Lilley was not implicated in the Jail-break. The robbery charge is scheduled to be heard in court here Tuesday.

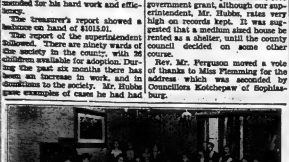
The semi-annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society was held on Thursday afternoon, May 16, in the S. S. room of the United Church, with a large and interested attendance. Warden S. Blakely, president of the society, was in the chair, following prayer by Rev. Mr. Ferguson, a duet "Sunrise and You" by Mrs. Walker and Miss Mae Killip, with Mrs. Case Walters at the piano, much enjoyed. Mrs. W. R. Browne, convener of the house committee, then gave her report for the past six months, acknowledging the receipt of money, clothing, food, bedding, furniture, and bread from almost every Institute and Women's organization in the town and county, as well as from the local stores and private citizens. The Kiwanis and the churches had also helped.

Mrs. S. P. Dodds of the Board of Management reviewed the work of the society for the half year. She spoke of the loss the society sustained by the death of its late president, Mr. Fred Newman. During "Crippled Children's Week" one child had been sent to Dr. Locke at Belleville for treatment. The superintendent, Mr. Ralph Hubbs, was warmly commended for his hard work and efficiency.

The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $1013.61.

The report of the superintendent followed. There are ninety wards of the society in the county, with 56 children available for adoption. During the past six months there has been an increase in work, and in addition to the society, Mr. Hubbs gave examples of cases he had had to deal with in his work and showed how the society considers first always the present and future interests of the child. In the shelter are seven wards.



Miss Mae Flemming, field superintendent of public welfare was introduced by Rev. David Wren.

She explained the new plans of Hon. Mitchell Hepburn, relating to the Children's Aid Work. The department proposes to pay grants to each society according to the quality of work they do. Completed field supervisors will evaluate the work done by each society. Formerly a grant of $600 was given to each. Now the grants will be $100, $500, $1000, $1500 or $2500 according as each society measures up to the minister's requirements. There will be three districts in Ontario, (1) north of Haliburton, (2) from York township east to the Quebec border, (3) from Toronto to Windsor. Miss Flemming will visit this district five times in six months and another supervisor will make the sixth monthly visit. Miss Flemming will act as a supervisor and also give guidance and leadership if this is wanted. Qualifying for grants will be under seven heads. (1) preventative work with neglected children in their own home family together. (2) administration of the local shelter as a clearing house, where children are received, given necessary attention and passed on to homes, (3) the finding of homes for adoption of wards, (4) the homes where children are trained, (5) selecting of suitable boarding homes.

Miss Flemming stressed the need of children in institutions and in homes to have an allowance, and to learn how to handle money. She emphasized the extreme care needed in finding homes for wards and of visiting these homes in and out of season, to ascertain if they are still suitable. An intelligent staff in the shelter was imperative and superintendents' records must be complete and up-to-date.

Hearty discussion followed re the grant to be received here. As things now are, with a shelter that is not suitable, Picton only will receive $500 government grant, although our superintendent, Mr. Hubbs, rates very high on records kept. It was suggested that a medium sized house be rented as a shelter, until the county council decided on some other course.

Rev. Mr. Ferguson moved a vote of thanks to Miss Flemming for the address which was seconded by Councillors Kotchepaw of Sophiasburg.

Demonstrating the Schafer Method of resuscitation from drowning, was patsonday and electric shock at Red Cross Home Nursing Course—this course teaches many other important subjects in home nursing of benefit to women in the home.

If we don't watch out, these Dionne quintuplets are going to be grown up young ladies before we know it. Here is most recent photo of the world renowned sisters of Callander, Ontario, seated at their breakfast table. As the bowls indicate the order is Emelie, Cecile, Yvonne, (note how her curly hair grows), Annette and the "baby" of the family, Marie. Hal Schumacher of Giants Holds an Undefeated Record Against Cincinnati Since 1932

Victories Stretched to 13 By Win on Sunday

Dizzy Dean Supplies Hit With The Bases Loaded

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, JR.

Although a couple of seasons ago it might have been a simple matter to become a "jinx" to Cincinnati Reds, Hal Schumacher has carried it so far it threatens to become a serious affair now that the Reds are finding better hitting.

Since he broke into the National League as a result in 1932 Schumacher has never lost a game to the Reds and his string of triumphs now going into his fourth season, has stretched to 13 games with a tie as the only interruption. The 13th triumph yesterday was almost as shaky an affair as the drawn battle two weeks ago. After building up an early lead, the Giants saw it fade away when a homer by Alex Kampouris started a sixth inning flurry that tied the score at 4-4 and it only had to go ten innings to win out 6-5.

In addition to flinging a fine game except for that one inning Schumacher knocked in three runs with a homer, a double and a single. Fly and did a lot of fielding to help out the crippled Giant infield. The victory enabled the New Yorkers, who looked as if they would be lucky to escape with their uniforms intact when Dick Bartell, Hughey Critz and Travis Jackson were all put on the side-lines, to win the series 3-1 and increase their lead over Brooklyn to two games again.

The Dodgers took their second straight licking from Hitting 5-3 when a four-run flurry against young Harry Kecsmith in the eighth settled the swinging match. Brooklyn retained second place, however, as Chicago Cubs yielded to the Phillies for the second time 3-1 on Lon Chiozza's homer with two aboard and Syl Johnson's fine relief hurling.

Dizzy in Fine Form.

Dizzy Dean led the Cardinals to a 7-3 triumphant over the Braves that placed them just a half game behind Chicago. In addition to pitching a seven-hit game, he hit a single with the bases full to climax the game-winning four run rally in the eighth.

After one day in third place in the American League, the Cleveland Indians returned to second with a 1-0 victory over the Yankees in the only keenest battle in the junior circuit. Walter Stewart, making his first Cleveland start, got the better of Lefty Gomez in a pitching duel featuring 11-inning mound argument with Charley Ruffing when Red Rolfe and Bill Dickey collided going after Lou Berger's bunt and the hit paved the way for the only run.

Chicago's White Sox continued to pull ahead with a 5 triumph over Boston although "Silent" John Whitehead, rookie hurling sensation, failed for the first time to go the route. He was belted out in a four-run spurt in the ninth but got credit for his sixth straight victory.

Detroit Tigers took the odd game and fifth place from Washington, slamming out 15 hits and a victory while the Athletics consolidated their hold on seventh by trimming the Browns in the fifth game of the game 6-5 while Doc Cramer's seventh-inning homer provided the winning run.

SOCCER

NEW YORK, May 20.—(CP)—Two straight victories and eight goals to one by their opponents gave the Scottish Football Association Tourists confidence today they might consider their tour successful in Canada and the United States with a clean slate.

As they entrained last night for Toronto for their first game against Canadian teams, they left behind them 10,000 fans convinced of their class and these scores in week-end games:—Scottish 3, Philadelphia Germans 0; Scottish 5; New York 2.

Here Sunday, before some 30,000 in the Polo Grounds, the Scots were too fast, too precise in passing and too accurate in marksmanship against a New York team, that was representative of the best soccer players of the Eastern United States. Jimmy Boyd scored "Dally" Duncan punched home three goals when all the invaders rushed to their 8-1 victory.

In Saturday's initial game it was the brilliant Walker who toed over the passes for the two goals Mills counted to give the Scots a 2-0 lead at half time over the German title-holders of the American League. Hughie Gallagher headed in the third goal early after a faultless centre by Duncan from near the corner flag.

Seagram Entry Much the Best In King's Plate

(By D. E. Burritt)

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, May 20 — (CP) — The King's plate, emblem of the oldest continuously-run horse race in America, has gone back to the Waterloo stable of Edward Seagram, where the traditional victories of his father's once-powerful string made it almost a permanent fixture.

After a year's absence, the trophy representing the plate donated by Queen Victoria in 1860, was reclaimed for Seagram, through the surprise victory of Sally Fuller in the 76th renewal of the Canadian Turf Classic before 25,000 people at Woodbine Saturday afternoon.

The fleet daughter of Judge Fuller out of Dorah Sheer, under the guidance of apprentice jockey, Herbie Lindbergh, easily defeated 11 other Ontario-foaled three-year-olds and ran over the mile and a furlong, and won for her owner more than $4,000 and the 50 guineas donated by the King.

There was never any doubt as to the outcome of the race once the Seagram filly took command of the pack passing the half-mile post and she easily wore off the momentary challenge from Harry Halch's Chicopen, which crossed the line three lengths behind the winner in a driving finish, followed by Sally Fuller's stablemate and co-entry, Gay Sympathy.

Lizaro No Threat

There was never any threat from the entry of H. S. McLaughlin whose newly-acquired colt, Epicurus managed to fill fourth place far ahead of his stablemate Eileen D., and the heavily-backed favorite Lizaro, who suffered his first defeat in four starts.

It was a big disappointment to the backers of Lizaro, son of the Romp H.-Listen Dearie, who had been installed at the top all through the winterbooks and who went to the post yesterday an even money choice.

The McLaughlin colt's poor performance all through the race confirmed previous rumors, that he was not in the best of condition and the closest he ever got to the front was seventh place before dropping back to finish tenth. Lizaro, the second-Trainer Harry Giddings, he could not get leaders in earnest.

Bob Kline gave the Royals only six hits in the opener and only Del Bissonette's homer in the third with all that saved the Canadians from a shutout. Buffalo won the nightcap in a breeze, scoring four runs in the second and seven in the third to make Ken Ash's pitching chores easy. Fitzgerald led the Bison attack with a home run, double and single and drove in four runs.

Toronto remained at the top by virtue of an 11-7 conquest of Rochester Red Wings. A pair of homeruns by Cal Chapman featured Toronto's 13-hit attack on four Red Wings' pitchers. Walter Hilcher went the route for the Leafs and worked no harder than he had to.

After taking two beatings from Albany, Newark Bears returned to form to sweep a doubleheader with the Senators, 11-8 and 7-3. Newark collected 24 hits off nine pitchers during the afternoon with George McQuinn leading the assault in the first game and Ernie Koy in the second.

Splitting two games with Syracuse, Baltimore Orioles moved into fourth place, a half game behind Buffalo and a half game in front of Montreal Reg. Grabowski shut out the Orioles with nine widely scattered hits in the opener and Syracuse won, 2-0. The second game was a tightly contested battle which the Orioles finally won.

Pair of Homers By Chapman Helps Defeat Rochester

(By The Associated Press)

From a spot deep in the second division, Roy Schalk's Buffalo Bisons had climbed into third place, trailing Toronto Maple Leafs, International League leaguers, by only 2½ games and second place Newark by only a game and a half.

Whipping Montreal Royals in both ends of a Sunday double-header, 3-1 and 11-6, the Bisons ran their string to seven victories in eight games and boosted themselves into a spot from which they can slam worrying the leaders in earnest.

Bob Kline gave the Royals only six hits in the opener and only Del Bissonette's homer in the third with all that saved the Canadians from a shutout. Buffalo won the nightcap in a breeze, scoring four runs in the second and seven in the third to make Ken Ash's pitching chores easy. Fitzgerald led the Bison attack with a home run, double and single and drove in four runs.

Toronto remained at the top by virtue of an 11-7 conquest of Rochester Red Wings. A pair of homeruns by Cal Chapman featured Toronto's 13-hit attack on four Red Wings' pitchers. Walter Hilcher went the route for the Leafs and worked no harder than he had to.

After taking two beatings from Albany, Newark Bears returned to form to sweep a doubleheader with the Senators, 11-8 and 7-3. Newark collected 24 hits off nine pitchers during the afternoon with George McQuinn leading the assault in the first game and Ernie Koy in the second.

Splitting two games with Syracuse, Baltimore Orioles moved into fourth place, a half game behind Buffalo and a half game in front of Montreal Reg. Grabowski shut out the Orioles with nine widely scattered hits in the opener and Syracuse won, 2-0. The second game was a tightly contested battle which the Orioles finally won.

JUNIOR SCHOOL RELAY FRIDAY

"Y" Also to Stage Three Mile And District Run

Continuing their usual Victoria Day programme of races at the local Fair Ground, the Y.M.C.A. are planning a run off the Junior School Relay Race to determine the 1935 winner of the Deacon Trophy. It is expected, that teams will be entered from the four Public Schools, St. Michaels, C.S.D. and the Collegiate. Last year the trophy was won by the team representing B.C.I. with O.S.D. pressing the winners all the way. Heretofore the boys have been called upon to run the 440 but with the race set at the half mile each runner will only be called upon to do 220 yards. This distance will not tax the little fellows as much as the quarter mile, a hard race in any man's land and at the shorter distance the boys will no doubt make much better time proportionately. All boys competing in this race must be under 15 years of age on May 1st and also in regular attendance at the school which they represent.

Immediately following the running of the Inter School Relay the Annual Three Mile City and District Run will take place on the same track. This distance has not attracted a very large group of runners at any time but last year saw a number of new entrants in the novice class, who performed in a highly creditable manner and it is hoped, that a similiar group may be prevailed upon to take part in the race again this year. In addition to the younger speedsters it is altogether likely that some of the old standbys including Cliff Archer, Bert Girling, Harold Browne and a number of others will answer the gun and more or less act as pace setters for the field. With the School Relay getting away at 10.00 a.m. the 3 mile race should get off to a start around 10.15.

McLarnin Shows Heavy Punching

NEW YORK, May 20.—(CP)—Supporting Jimmy McLarnin for the May 28 defence of his welterweight title against Barney Ross showed both his stinging right-hand today like bees around honey.

The Belfast-born right, the pride of the champion from Vancouver many Rockouts to make his ring career one of the greatest in modern boxing history, came to camp at Swan Lake, N.Y., Sunday. It flashed with such blinding brilliance, Coach D. W. Wear, member of the State Boxing Commission, reported, said he believed the crushing Canadian could have stopped any all three of his sparring mates.

Harry Cooley, McLarnin admirer who hitch-hiked from Bennington, N.Y., to join the camp, sported two split lips and a chest nose after four minutes of punch-trading with the titleholder.

The wavy Ross might leave his fight in the workshop troubled members of the Chicago Park Dist. their Grossinger Lake Camp. Like "Pop" Foster, McLarnin's manager, they decreed today a holiday.

Lou E. Marsh, sports editor of the Toronto Star, got his driver's licence slightly mixed last week, or perhaps he still remembers that old "trick or treat" game of a decade and a half ago. At any rate in a special story on the sport page Lou tries to put the "fore" on the O.B.A.A. in regards to the famous Dan case now being widely broadcast by the T.A.A.A. and sees Belleville as his medium of "excuses". Lou says Toronto is "the centre of the world" in the matter of imports for baseball while Belleville goes merrily along after bringing in player, eHarris, Murphy, McInroy, Barclay and Calhoun, all of which shows how little Mr. Marsh knows of the diamond activities of the province. He even had George "Knotty" Lee coaching the local "Radios". Apparently Lou had better stick to sex films and wrestling, sport activities he knows something of. Incidentally if he desires any more information in regard to the Lamoureaux tangle he is quite likely invited, he could get in touch with the last year's junior baseball team that operated in Belleville. "They know, Lou!"

The latest O.B.A.A. bulletin informs us that Sig Konopka was refused a transfer from Detroit to Peterboro. By any stretch of imagination does this mean that Konopka will not be allowed to perform for the Peter Pats this year? If such be the case the Lamoureaux bowl and the Dex squawk will sound the note whispering alongside of the bereals that will be heard in the Limelight City if Konopka is "cast out". Whither charge of residence means the same to the O.B.A.A. as a transfer or not, we are not quite certain, but the rules definitely state that Konopka's request for "a change of residence" be held up. Incidentally player Mays of Oshawa requested to be permitted to play exhibition games with the Oshawa "Brewers" until the first of July, the date upon which he will actively enter C.O.B.L. competition. Nothing was done in regards to the request, but we imagine the request will be granted. Ernie Gibson will have one more transfer to present the O.B.A.A. in the near future, we understand. It concerns Stan Card and another member of the 1935 intermediate championships will be among those missing when the Gibbards line up for the Big Day. A new shortstop is being groomed to take Card's place.

This looks to be a rather busy week for sport in Belleville. A few schedules are being drafted today, but the big doings are on Thursday night the wrestlers are coming back with a return bout between Belleville Comedian, Ernie Shaw, and Dominion champion, Yvon Lemieux, at the Belleville Arena, is the feature. British Empire middleweight wrestler, Frenchy Savoie, in an semi-weight show here during the old country and is reputed to be a capable wrestler., who, is headed towards bigger things in the grappling world. Besides the ... Al Dunlop, here is the Walter Pardell-Don Pedrotti semi-final. This last Hasil merited much local admiration, thereby giving the fans what really should be, three main bouts this week.

For the information of wrestling fans it might be well to know that "Lefty" Priestly, who meets Frank Slavik on Thursday night as the latter's last appearance, is a former elite middleweight wrestler. Priestly, at one time, was one of the best boys in the old country and is reputed to be a capable wrestler., who, is headed towards bigger things in the grappling world. Besides the ... Al Dunlop, here is the Walter Pardell-Don Pedrotti semi-final. This last Hasil merited much local admiration, thereby giving the fans what really should be, three main bouts this week.

The Belleville Senior Softball League holds the official opening in Belleville, Tweed and Redneschville.

Recently we received an invitation from H. J. Bryon, secretary of the Kingston Ponies to attend a complimentary dinner being given to President J. F. Sowards of the Ponies by the executives and players of the Kingston and Belleville teams directly following the opening of the C.O.B.L. season in Kingston on Wednesday night. We understand the dinner is to be held at the Lasalle Hotel where the "Radios" intend making their headquarters while stopping in Kingston this year with fond hopes of faring as well as the St. Thomas club did when they stopped there. "Who said ballsters were not superstitious?"

The O.B.A.A. strenuously objected to the amusement rate recently suggested by the Provincial Government when the former kept over last Friday night. Just how this new amusement tax will affect minor baseball cannot say, but it is certainly that minor sports, especially are having tough enough sledding without adding further financial worries. Incidentally nothing has actually been stated in regards to how the tax will re-act, where a silver collection is taken, such as is the case at softball games. Another angle that hurts personally is the fact we will have to pay the newly inaugurated amusement tax on all passes issued to the press. "There just ain't no justice." But then there is one consolation—we aspire at all baseball games to have to "pay" their way into the press box which is as should be according to many fans.

Coach Mills and Manager Young divided the Stewart-Warner-Alemites into two squads and indulged in a strenuous two hour practice game on Saturday afternoon. Williams hurled for one squad with Barclay on the receiving end, while Ernie Smith and Dad Wilkins laboured on the hillop for the Yanigans. ultimate score unknown. The "Radios" will taper off with a practice this evening and a light batting practice on Tuesday before they open in Kingston on the 22nd and pay off the baseball bill in Belleville on the 24th of May. Coach Mills expects to be able to name his starting team along with the starting pitcher, but "it safe in panhling that Jack "Chief" Williams will hurl before the home crowd here on Friday, leaving Calhoun, Wilkins and Smith for mound duty in Kingston.

Daily Short Story

Sketch from Life

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

"Come on folks, get a pencil sketch of yourselves. It only takes three minutes and it's a fine gift for the wife or sweetheart." It was Joe Johnson spelling to the early crowd that flocked to the world's most famous resort....Coney Island.

Joe's sketches brought him 25 cents each. He had been an excellent pen artist in past years, but old age had swept down upon him and robbed him of a steady hand. Jobs being scarce he had taken to this, a puny attempt to raise money for the motherless, invalid daughter who had been ill since her mother died. And now infantile paralysis had cruelly descended upon her.

Joe had stood by helpless to aid her without funds. The doctor said she would die if she didn't have a specialist's attention. She must not die....She was all he had left ....

He stopped at a newsstand and purchased a morning paper on his way home. The headlines screamed the latest outrage of "The Owl Man," who had terrorized the city for months. Police officials, hitherto, demand that he be brought to justice. If he was not the desperadoes they were to stand a thorough cleaning. Precinct captains relayed orders to their forces. A drag-net was in progress for a man that the police had never seen.

The criminal called "The Owl Man," moved with the grace of a feline—that the name. He had looted several banks, always lining up the depositors against the wall while he and his confederate deftly packed their booty into a small black valise. In his latest exploit he had killed a man—a guard who tried to foil the holdup. The bank was offering a reward of $10,000 for his arrest.

The Reward

"How I would like to nab that guy" mused old Joe. "The reward would more than pay for that operation for Jane .... It would make her well again...." He sighed and laughed at his foolish thought.

He continued his reading while riding home. The article stated that the man was too clever to be an amateur. The police did not have a good description of him, because all his victims gave them conflicting reports. Thus the police were handicapped without a proper description.

Tiring of reading, Joe put the paper into his pocket and then figured up his meagre earnings of the day. Four dollars and fifty cents.. Not much but better than nothing. He would go to the bank in the morning and deposit $10 of his earnings of the week. He was saving every penny he could so he might get the necessary fee for the doctor.

On his way home he stopped at a grocery store to get breakfast for the morning. He climbed the stairs to his flat and inserted the key into the lock. He thought that Jane would be sleeping, but she was reading a book, waiting for him. She had his pipe filled, and his socks mended. He kissed her and gave her the paper, then went to prepare her a cup of tea.

"Daddy," she said, "do you think the police will catch "The Owl Man?"

"Don't worry your pretty head about thieves and killers, dear." Joe said tenderly. "The police will catch him....Turn to the comics, they're very funny today.

To The Bank

After tea they went to bed. Old Joe always tucked Jane in and kissed her good night then he went to his parlor couch.

The next morning when Jane had awakened, Joe had the breakfast cooked and was all dressed to make his weekly visit to the bank. He gave Jane her breakfast and kissed her before he left.

As he was making out his deposit slip at the bank a gruff voice behind him commanded:

"Put up your hands and don't get nervous because this gat is liable to go off."

Everyone obeyed. They were searched, their money and jewels were taken from the tellers, was deposited into a black valise. Old Joe was handicapped with unsteady hands, but had the eyesight of an eagle. He tried to distinguish the leader of the gang from the others. The man giving the orders was the leader, he guessed. Joe studied his countenance intensely. Suddenly it was all over. The bandits had left as quickly and as quietly as they had come. Someone said it was "The Owl Man."

Old Joe grabbed a piece of paper and made a sketch of the man that he thought was the leader. He hurried from the bank to police headquarters where, he made a more perfect drawing for the assisted police captain.

Police Experts specialisted the officer. He turned to his secretary and told him to get the rogues gallery photos on Keegan immediately. The captain telephoned the police commissioner, who said:

Comparing the sketch and the photographs, they agreed that it was the same man. Orders were given. Motorcycle cops, patrolmen and detectives were sent to bring Keegan alias "The Owl Man" to justice. He was brought in.

Jane had an operation and it was a success.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating breakfast and ma said to pop, I've got a letter from my sister Fanny its seems she and Abbi are going to celebrate their 15th wedding anniversity, my how time flies for practically everybody.

She's not hinting for a present or anything like that is she by any means? pop said, and ma said, Only in an ulterior way, perhaps. Anyway I'm not going to make the same fatls move that she made when she sent me a few cheesy hankerchiefs on my last anniversity. I wouldn't be so small minded even in average. Not that I value the mere money value of the gift above the intrinsic sentimental value, but still I bleve in some sort of a reasonable consequence between the 2. And on the other hand I wouldn't be thawtless enough to send Fanny such a kopky present that she'll think it's mean as a reflexion on the laffable gift she sent me. I think I'll write her a letter, ma said.

Which she did, reading it to pop after supper, being about different subjects till it got to the end and then being, P.S., Now about your anniversity, I've been casting about in my mind's eye for a suitable present, but the ony things that I considered good enough for you were miles beyond my means, such as a solid silver table service hand carved or carved by hand or oil painting by some famous old master that would stay in your family for generations constantly increasing in value(so in the absence of what I would really like to give you please accept my hartiest congradulations, your loving sister Stawleen in wich Willyum hartily joins me. Do you think that's all rite, Willyum, ma said.

It's a wow, pop said, and ma said, How do you mean, do you think it's all rite?

It's a masterpiece, pop said.

And he got in back of the sporting page and stayed there.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED— (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

Too young was Roger to have experienced the World War's horrors. So, unmindful of African dangers, longing for adventure, fired with patriotism and hatred of the New menace, he was among the first to enlist in the African struggle.

Weeks later, Flight-Lieutenant Roger "Jerry" Cecil, Royal Air Service, was on reconnaissance. A rumor had come to British African headquarters that the Reds were marching across the dark continent to reinforce their colonial troops.

The thing seemed preposterous, but no good general permits the least rumor of enemy activity to go uninvestigated. Therefore Lieutenant Cecil flew low toward the west searching, with keen eyes for signs of the Red army.

His all-day scouting had given no sign of man. As top speed it would take straight flying to cover the distance back to camp before darkness. With ample fuel and trusty machine he had no doubts that he could do it. It was then that his engine stalled!

"The Thin Man"

Rosalind Russell, Myrna Loy, William Powell and May Robson in a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production

"The Thin Man", new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sensational production, returning to the Belle tomorrow, by popular demand of an appreciative public, presents one of the most gripping mystery films to reach the motion picture screen. It was adapted from the best-seller detective novel of the same title written by Dashiel Hammett, master mystery story-teller.

Alexander Woolcott, ace-literary critic proclaimed "The Thin Man" as "the best detective story yet written in America."

Sinclair Lewis, famous author and Nobel prize winner, has declared "The Thin Man" as certainly the most breathless of all Dashiel Hammett fascinating detective mystery stories.

Enough to life upon the screen, "The Thin Man" is said to be even more gripping than the book. William Powell, the motion picture screen's outstanding portrayer of suave sleuths, plays the all-important role of Nick Charles the ex-detective who is dragged into the triple-murder investigation against his will.

Myrna Loy, in the co-starring role, appears as his charming and amusing wife, Nora. Maureen O'Sullivan portrays the Thin Man's young daughter and supplies a young and beautiful romance with young Henry Wadsworth, a new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and a youth of great promise. Nat Pendleton wears from his usual gangster and dumb underworld character role to play the part of a bewildered detective lieutenant.

Asta, Gombell also deviates from her usual characterizations of comedy roles to give one of her best performances, a heavy one, of the boisterous and cheating Mimi, former wife of the thin man. Other favorites in important roles are Porter Hall as Henry, Cesar Romero, Harold Huber and Edward Brophy.

Colonel W. S. VanDyke—who brought such memorable pictures to the screen as "White Shadows in the South Seas", "Trader Horn", "Eskimo" and "Penthouse" was the director of "The Thin Man".

May Robson

With Jay Robson and Preston Foster featured "Strangers All" is A-1 entertainment that can be guaranteed perfect for the whole family to enjoy. It is one of the grandest of all the May Robson vehicles.

The feature has a powerful punchy plot that intermingles delightful comedy to relieve the tenseness of high dramatic sequences. A sweeping presentation of the wonderous theme of mother love, it rushes to an exciting climax, with the curtain on a real scene of heart-interest. "Strangers All", the second feature on the Belle current program can be summed up as a picture for everybody to see at the May Robson's brilliance makes it one of the grandest family pictures of the year other season. The Belle latest news flashes will be introduced by Edwin C. Hill.

"Tomorrow's Youth"

The so-called "eternal triangle" and its numerous variations, has provided the basis of hundreds of stories for the stage and screen, but never has it been given quite the unique twist provided in "Tomorrow's Youth," the ensuing Monogram screen offering which will provide screen fare for Capitol Theatre patrons of high quality.

Furnishing the amazing complications of the triangular plot are John Millan as the husband, Martha Sleeper, as the neglected wife, and blonde Gloria Shea, as the gold-digger, while the blend of vamp's nemesis is none other than little Dickie Moore, the appealing child actor of a score of successful screen plays.

And while it is not the most unusual thing about the picture, the selection of pretty Gloria Shea to play the gold-digger is probably one of the most unusual bits of casting, since Miss Shea has never before played anything but sympathetic roles, and ordinarily is seen on the other corner of the three-cornered plot.

Miss Shea's performance, however, is a compliment to the untiring judgment of the men who make her screen career possible. While singing over a national network, Miss Shea was selected as the most beautiful radio artist by a committee headed — by James Montgomery Flagg and McClelland Barclay, the two most famous contemporary painters of feminine pulchritude.

AT THE STRAND

Barbara Stanwyck Proves Artistry In Dynamic Role

Barbara Stanwyck has the most dynamic role of her career in her new production, "The Woman in Red," which will be shown for the first time locally at the Capitol Theatre, Monday.

This talented star has an unusually strong vehicle in "The Woman in Red," and makes the most of every scene. The picture, based on the popular novel, "North Shore," by Wallace Irwin, is filled with thrills and intense dramatic action set in the luxurious atmosphere of Long Island country estates.

Miss Stanwyck appears in the character of a Kentucky girl thoroughly versed in horse lore who, when the family fortunes are reversed, becomes a professional rider for a wealthy New York society woman.

Through her skill as a rider she brings one blue ribbon after another to the owner, whose gratitude leads to bids which she wins the man they both love, Miss Stanwyck is charming in the lighter scenes and the romantic situations, breathes to new heights of emotional acting in the intense dramatic sequences, especially in a sensational court trial in the smashing climax in which she is willing to sacrifice love and honor in order to save a man she knows to be innocent from conviction on a murder charge.

Gene Raymond, in the role of an impoverished young aristocrat who woos the Kentucky beauty off her feet in a whirlwind romance, proves himself a magnetic lover, as well as an accomplished horseman.

Genevieve Tobin, always the finished artiste, gives an unusually fine portrayal of the wealthy society woman who employs Miss Stanwyck and does everything to break up her love match after she discovers that she brings out the finest characteristics of the woman of polished surface with real finesse.

The romantic mix-up really is a quadrangular affair, for John Eldredge plays the part of Raymond's rival for the love of Miss Stanwyck. He is excellent in his role of a wealthy man about town, who, when he gets into difficulty would rather face prison or the electric chair than jeopardize a woman's reputation.

A full fledged horse show photographed at the famous Richwood Breakfast Club, and with some of the finest of West Coast blooded horses taking part, adds to the color of the production, as also does a thrilling polo match in which Raymond proved his prowess as a polo player and horseman.

There is an exceptionally large and talented supporting cast, those deserving special mention being the strong characterizations including Phillip Reed, Dorothy Tree, Russell Hicks, Nella Walker, Claude Gillingwater, Doris Lloyd, Hale Hamilton, Arthur Treacher, Ben Van Sloan, Forrester Harvey, Ann Shoemaker and Gordon Elliott.

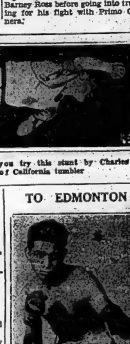
HITLER SEEKING TALK WITH LAVAL

Trying to Ease Discomfort of German Position

(By Mervin K. Whitelaether)

(Copyright, 1935, By The Associated Press).



Berlin, May 20—Pinched by French encirclement, Reichsfuehrer Hitler is again seeking today to ease the discomfort of Germany's position through a frank talk with Pierre Laval, France's Foreign Minister.

With all exits seemingly closed by France's diplomatic maneuvering, it is believed Der Fuehrer is hunting high and low for a way out of the dilemma with which his foreign policy is now confronted.

With the assistance of Joseph Beck Polish Foreign Minister, Hitler succeeded in getting Laval into a two-and-one-way hour conference at Krakow with his principal aide, General Hermann Wilhelm Goering, Minister of Aviation.

But the Frenchman later slipped out of Poland through Germany with indications he has no intention of returning to this side of the Rhine.

"There is not much chance that Laval will give Hitler the satisfaction of an interview," quarters close to the Foreign Ministry say. The conversation with Goering was instructive, but that's about all."

Mayor McGeer States Possibility of Serious Trouble

Vancouver, May 21—(CP)— Vancouver's relief problem was deadlocked today. And into the activities of the striking relief camp workers entered again 75 women who last night picketed the Vancouver City police station, until assured by Police Chief W. W. With this assurance, the women, all members of single unemployed strikers left the station.

The men have been promised use of a hall to hold a mass meeting later today to decide whether they will return to the relief camps as advised by federal, provincial and civic authorities.

At a glance, the present situation is: Two thousand relief camp strikers, gathered here since April 4, still refused to go back to the camps unless they receive more pay and improvement of relief conditions were made.

Mayor G. G. McGeer denied responsibility or maintenance of the relief strikers and declared no more relief will be given and no further demands or communication will be permitted.

Not a pretty beast, nor exactly resembling a pig, the Aardvark let out many words in three feet of conscious body and 2 1-2 feet of tail that looks like it should be attached to a kangaroo. But not the Aardvark, while the press got an expert description from Dr. Raymond Ditmars, zoo curator and an animal observer of unquestioned veracity, did the describing.

"Let us begin at the anterior terminus of this animal," said the doctor with rare solemnity. "There are the ears, like those of a rabbit, attachment housing a 13-inch tongue. Immediately aft are a pair of rabbit ears, like those of a rabbit, and pink. Continuing aft we again find orycteropusafer.

Berlin, May 21.—(CP Havas) — Compulsory military service of one year in the army, navy and air force was promulgated today by the German cabinet at a special meeting called just before the session of the Reichstag.

The decision was taken in connection with the Saturday (May 18) announcement that Germany had repudiated military conscription, in defiance of the military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles.

BANKS OBJECT TO INSURANCE

Claim Benefits Outweighed by Cost to Banks

Ottawa, May 21 (CP)—Protest against placing the cost of the scheme of the Government's Unemployment Insurance Bill was heard today before the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee. The only objection voiced by Jackson Dodds, president of the Canadian Bankers' Association was against the extended instructions given to the banks in the Dominion plans.

The contributions and payments under the scheme originally framed were actuarially based upon the assumption these extended industries would be excluded and by the proposal now to include them the cost of other financial business where the percentage of employment is comparatively low, it may reasonably be anticipated the contributions of the banks will be increased considerably in excess of the benefits paid out," Mr. Dodds told the committee. "This is the salient point of view, therefore the operation of the Dominion plan by including banks would cost these institutions and their employees more than it should."

For the calendar year 1934 the banks paid the number of employees in all banks receiving not more than $2,000 was 19,432 of which the total unemployed during that year was 407 only two percent. Of these number of 407 unemployees consisted of women and on the basis of the contributions required under the bill, the banks would be required to pay $167,136 and the employees an equivalent amount, making a total payment from these sources of $404,216.

COL. LAWRENCE LEAVES BROTHER SMALL ESTATE

Death by Accident Says English Jury Probing Tragedy Today

NATURE OF INJURY

Amazing Story of Hero's Life in Arabia is Told

Woolworestshire, Eng., May 21 — (AP)—A coroner's jury today decided "Lawrence of Arabia" met death accidentally. The verdict was returned after the jurors heard testimony, the victim, Col. T. E. Lawrence, was thrown along a Dorsetshire county road on his motorcycle at a speed of from 50 to 60 miles an hour before he collided with a butcher boy on a bicycle. Conflicting testimony concerning a mysterious black automobile, which the boy said had been driven recklessly to avoid before the collision, enlivened the hearing. Corporal Ernest Catchpole said after the war-time hero left the Bovington Tank Camp enroute to his cottage nearby he passed an automobile and then heard the unmounted boy attempt to avoid two youths on bicycles. Lawrence was thrown from his bicycle and rolled over the handlebars, he testified.

Speed as Cause

Asked by the coroner, Neville Jones, whether there was sufficient room for Lawrence to pass between the automobile and the cyclist, Catchpole said there would have been if the motorcyclist had not swerved. Sir Archibald Frank Fletcher, 14, companion of Albert Hargreaves, 15-year-old cyclist injured in the accident, testified he didn't see the automobile to which Catchpole referred.

Greaves said he heard the motorcycle overtaking him from the rear and remembered nothing further until he awoke in the hospital.

Dr. Kenneth Allen of the medical corps said the victim died of skull fracture, laceration of the brain, heart failure and congestion of the lungs. If he had lived, he added, he would have been paralyzed and would have lost his memory.

Fatal Injuries

The most poignant moment in the hearing came with the testimony of Capt. Allen.

A. W. Lawrence, brother of the dead man, asked the doctor: "Had his recovery somehow taken place, would there have been this condition mentally?"

"Had he lived", the doctor replied, "he would have been unable to speak. He would have lost his memory and would be helpless."

The army physician said his postmortem examination revealed nine inches long extending from the left side of the head backward in addition to a smaller fracture and other injuries.

Lawrence's Will to Brother

The brother later said Lawrence's will bequeathed his estate, valued at about £200 (approximately $960), some investments, his literary rights and his 1,000 cc motorcycle on which he was riding at the time of his death, to his sister, seven books and private papers.

The film rights to "Seven Pillars of Wisdom" and "Revolt in the Desert" have been acquired by Alexander Korda, it was learned today. Korda's representations, but Alexander Korda, the company's managing director said the pictures would not be produced by Lawrence's family or friends objected.

The rights were purchased from the trustees of the trust fund for the widows and orphans of men of the Royal Air Force, to which Lawrence gave his copyrights.

Jimmy Qualifies to Play on Team When Birth Certificate Produced

Whether Jimmy really qualified on account of his age to play on the West side baseball team was a question that agitated the opposing team. So when Jimmy strode to bat in the first game and hurled three mighty clouts of indignation from the other pine.

"I just don't," objected the captain of the team Jimmy faced, but Jimmy insisted, "I can prove it," he countered as both teams went into a huddle on the playing field.

"Yah, prove it," chimed in nine other voices in the "Yah" team.

"Birth certificate" demanded one player struck by a sudden notion.

a hectic session on the ball field trooped into the office was explained to the clerk in charge.

"We want to see Cyril's age—this guy's" explained the leader of the group motioning at Jimmy the pitcher. "He says he's ten. Is he?" From the files a number of birth certificates were produced, but only a dozen or more stained little fists bent over the sheaf of certificates the proper certificate was produced.

"James—Born in Belleville, 1925."

"Ole" agreed the leader, "that's all we wanted to know."

Late yesterday afternoon the game was being continued.

CAPT. RAYFIELD DEPUTY-GOVERNOR

Appointment to Toronto Jail Post is Announced

Toronto, May 21.—Captain Walter Rayfield, V.C., Sergeant-at-Arms of the Ontario Legislature, has been appointed deputy-governor of the Toronto Jail, in succession to Clifford Blackburn, who was dismissed from the post by the Hepburn Government last week.

Provincial Rayfield was born in London, England, and received his early education there, and in the Collegiate Grammar-School. While still a youth he came to Canada and resided in Ontario for some time. He then went to California, and later joined the Royal Canadian Agricultural College. He had an extensive experience in California in directing men, and had started a successful career in that state. However, immediately upon the outbreak of the war he hurried to Canada and enlisted as soon as the boat docked at Victoria, B.C. He went to France with the 7th Battalion, and so distinguished himself in action that he was awarded the Victoria Cross.

After he returned from overseas he was in charge of the transfer of shell-shock and other seriously disabled soldiers to the military hospitals under the D.S.C.R. Later he was an official of the Toronto Harbor Commission. Last year he was appointed Sergeant-at-Arms of the Ontario Legislature, and in that capacity fulfilled his duties efficiently and to the credit of all concerned.

He is naturally modest and retiring in disposition, and very popular with all who know him. Because of his wide experience, knowledge and interest in his fellow men it is expected that he will be a very capable deputy-governor of the Toronto Jail."

Mute Testimony of Unfinished Journey

Mute testimony of death in the air and a journey that never was finished was displayed in the city today by James Bolton, youthful resident, in the shape of an abluminum hand and the withered leg of a carrier pigeon to which it was affixed. Leg and hand were found in the Canadian hawk's nest in the bush west of the city. The nest which was discovered during the delay contained a number of other small bones, evidently belonging to other birds. RADIATOR FROZEN IN NORTH COUNTY

Reeve James Sprackett of the township of Tudor and Cashel is inclined to smile at the comments of local residents when the subject of coolness during the past week or so is mentioned.

As proof of the assertion the well known councillor who left his car in the open one evening last week awoke to find the radiator of his car frozen and ruptured in half a dozen places.

REV. C.E. CLARKE ROTARY SPEAKER

Present Conditions in World Subject of Address

"Present conditions in the world and our attitude toward them" was the subject of a very interesting address before Belleville Rotary Club at the Monday meeting by Rev. Charles E. Clarke of Toronto formerly of Belleville.

Chaotic conditions in the world today and lack of coherence and co-ordination in the world of art and science, economics, literature, religion, etc, were described in an outstanding manner by the speaker who referred back one hundred years to an era of similar conditions in England when the great leaders of the day thought and said the conditions were as bad, that the world could never recover and that the destruction of that nation of England of that day passed through the storm with courage and determination and out of that crisis came some of the greatest reforms the world has known.

Conditions were chaotic today but there was no cause for despair or action, all advanced thought going off on independent lines, which was the principal characteristic, the result is that there are many panaceas but few effective remedies which will cure all the world ills, in their opinion. All thing is drifting and nothing is getting nowhere.

What is needed is that bulldog courage, which brought England through the storm and many times ago and is bringing it through the present crisis better than all fleeting sentiment of Great Britain has shown courage and determination in the most fighting depression conditions and has shown the world the true spirit.

All that is necessary is to face the present conditions as was done by British bulldog determination and courage, which overcame many obstacles and difficulties in the past, avoiding quack remedies and recognizing that depressions recur and problems will vanish and a better day dawn, if we only face the present chaotic conditions.

The speaker analyzed present conditions in a clear and a very interesting manner and gave his views as to the remedy and cure and recovery.

Rev. Mr. Clarke was introduced by Past President O. H. Scott and Rotary appreciation was expressed by President Stokes and chairman Jos. Shortt.

AUTO SPECIALIST WILL TALK TO CAR OWNERS

Provincial Auto Electric Service have recently opened a specialized service station at 118 Front Street, where a staff of experts will handle the servicing of the ignition system, the generator and fuel pump, shock absorbers and other products on the modern motor car, which require a highly specialized service. The station is equipped with the most modern testing devices for determining conditions within the engine. These instruments almost literally peek into the engine, and point out the ills if there are any.

Mr. Fred Yates, manager of this station who had had many years experience in the automotive industry believes that the car owners are interested in the how and why of the operation of the electrical system and therefore has arranged an invitation in the form of a Service Clinic for car owners. He has secured the services of Mr. H. G. Bration a factory trained service engineer of many years practical field experience who will speak to interested car owners on the modern high compression ignition and tell owners how to get the most out of their cars at the least expense. Mr. Bration has been lecturing for many years on this subject and only recently returned from an extensive lecturing tour in Western Canada.

The talk will not be of a technical nature, and will be interesting to the owner and members of his family who drive.

In addition Mr. Bration will be available on Wednesday and Friday during the day to test cars. This is the first automotive service of Provincial Auto Electric Service.

D.D.G.M. MAKES OFFICIAL VISIT

Rt. Wor. Bro. Mikel Traces History of Grand Lodge

"Let all the things thou aimest at be thy God's, thy country's and thine."

With those words from Shakespeare, Rt. Wor. Bro. W. J. Mikel, D.D.G.M. closed his last official visit in the district to Marmora Lodge, when the Free Masons of Marmora with their visiting brethren from Bleiler, Madoc, Belleville and other lodges filled the Masonic Temple.

After the inspection the members adjourned to a banquet provided by the ladies of the Anglican Church by the ladies of that congregation, after which Bro. Gerald Sharpe rendered a number of vocal selections accompanied by Bro. Charles Allen.

A number of toasts were proposed and responded to, the speakers being Wor. Bro. Col. Roscoe Vanderwater, Wor. Bro. S. B. Wright, President of the Deloro Band, Wor. Bro. H. W. Sabine, Wor. Bro. Clem Thompson, Rt. Wor. Bro. C. H. Bussard, Wor. Bro. Lieut-Col. A. V. Yates, V. Wor. Bro. W. L. Rigg, Wor. Bro. Dr. Carleton, Wor. Bro. Solmes, and Wor Bro. F. O. Chamberlain.

In responding to the toast to Grand Lodge, Rt. Wor. Bro. Mikel shortly traced the history of Free Masonry from the 2,000 Masters who had charge of the construction of King Solomon's temple down to the Grand Lodge of Canada in Ontario. He referred to the genealogy of her late Majesty Queen Victoria and traced the Royal Family of Israel by the late Rev. Dr. Wild, and followed the words of Rand Fisher, real-admiral of the British navy "Jerusalem" the capital of the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel where we are without doubt, for how otherwise could ever we have an Emperor when we have had such Midas to guide us and rule us as those who gave up Heligoland, Tangier, Cuxcos, Corfu, Delagoa Bay, Java, Sumatra, Mitjorca, etc. I have been at all the places named so am able to state from personal knowledge, only Englishmen could possibly have been guilty of such inconceivable folly as to surrender them, and again I say "Let us thank God that we are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel" in support of the contention made by many that the British people are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, who are referred to in the Bible 2,545 years ago, during his gave great praise to the Church of England, for the faithful of the ladies of the church in providing the menu.

FOREST FIRES BURN IN NORTH

Dungannon Reeve Says Fifteen Could be Seen at One Time

Fifteen separate and distinct forest fires in the thickly wooded township of Dungannon and adjoining townships in the northern part of Hastings County, spiralling white columns of smoke into the air in one day last week give only an indication of the extreme dryness throughout the north, it was reported by Reeve J. K. Churcher of Dungannon, who visited the city briefly yesterday on official business.

Strong winds and lack of rain during the past few weeks have resulted in a very dry condition, and every available effort is being made precautions in the matter of fires", reported Reeve Churcher, "I, myself, saw fifteen fires in one day from one of the fire ranger's stations."

When white plumes of smoke appear, the fire ranger immediately fire ranger, posted on the township station outlooks hastily organized volunteer fire fighting crews are sent among the settlers. When the smoke is sighted in distant regions of their territory, telephones are used to acquaint the residents nearest the blaze.

In the matter of fire protection, this year the ranger service is responsible for fires only in Crown lands; the various municipalities must, hereafter their own particular territory.

Careless smokers, it was reported are the cause of many of the more minor fires in the woods at this time of the year. Settlers clearing and burning brush are a good account. Not to be ignored also are the selfish individuals of the north country, who in order to create a demand for their cords of wood, would congregate to feed on the bush grass, which generally grows in a burned over area. On the woods deliberately. A stiff fine or jail sentence is reported awaiting these men when caught, it was stated.

FRUIT MACHINERY OFFICE ENTERED

$9.65 Taken From Open Safe Some Time in Night

Gaining entrance by means of forcing a rear window robbers ransacked the office of the Fruit Machinery Company building, Front St., before forcing open the safe and taking $9.65, the entire cash contents of the safe some time last night.

In the vicinity of 11.00 pm, the local police were informed, that safe cons were heard conversing in the building, upon subsequent investigation a man and a woman were discovered at the rear of the building and were held briefly for questioning. They established their innocence, however, leading the authorities to believe their information had been slightly exaggerated as the officers had thoroughly searched the premises.

Upon the opening of the office of the Belleville Fruit Machinery Company this morning, Mrs. Carr it was discovered that persons had entered the building through a rear window, later forcing their way into the inner office, where the safe was located. Desk and desk drawers had been opened and ransacked and the safe, which is believed to have been left unlocked last night, was opened and the sum of $9.65 taken. No other articles of value were reported missing, leading the authorities to believe that cash was the sole object of the robbers' intentions.

Investigation by the police today revealed that two men had apparently entered the building and completed the robbery. Further investigations are in progress.

THE DRAMA

William Young People Winners at Dramatic Festival Sponsored by Presbytery

In the final dramatic festival of the Young People's Societies of Belleville Presbytery held last evening in John Street United Church Hall, William Young people, winners of the Prince Edward-Lennox and Addington competition, was awarded the cup with their presentation of "Not, Quite Such a Goose", the silver contestants' trophy. The Young People, winners of Hastings Festival whose play was "The Bishop's Candlesticks". The contest was somewhat in the nature of a father-son competition as the pastor of Wilton, is Rev. Dr. W. P. Fletcher, while his son, Rev. W. G. Fletcher, who took rote of Valjean in "The Bishop's Candlesticks" is pastor at Eldorado.

Rev. C. H. Ferguson of Northport, president of the Young People's Societies of Belleville Presbytery, in an interesting address before the program opened, explained that this was the first year that a drama festival had been undertaken by the Presbytery. Twelve groups had competed and from the keen interest shown it is expected, that next year will see many more groups entered.

Miss Merry, Adjudicator

Miss N. P. Merry acted as adjudicator and in giving her decision at the close of the competition complimented the groups on the interesting plays chosen for presentation, the first, especially, giving the actors opportunities for working up characters and getting dramatic effects. Everybody spoke clearly and distinctly and did not fall into the error of facing the wings, a fault common to many inexperienced actors.

In the first play "The Bishop's Candlesticks", Miss Merry pointed out the Bishop looked far too young, there being no effort made to age to the part. His voice kept too much on the one level. The convict looked perfect in his part and his make up very good. Mrs. Valjean's actor liked particularly the pathos in Jean Valjean attacks his meal with such gusto. Jean looked far too young for the part but was a good deal of her role, especially where she left the candlesticks. The part of the serving girl was good and the sergeant of police was interesting, the costumes of the gendarmerie were particularly good.

The reception of the actors by a trying circumstance in the play was highly commended, the players displaying self reliance and self control.

The team work was not good, in this play too much was allowed to depend on the role of the convict, and Miss Merry also advised the players to become more interested in their parts. The group, however, was to be commended for real ambition in selecting such a difficult play. Suggestions made were given for this play. The cast was as follows—The Bishop—Cecil Rathbun. His sister, Persons, Marion Wright. Jean Valjean, Rev. W. G. Fletcher, Marie, Gladys Martin. Gendarme, Vernon Strebe gendarmes, Gordon Hall, Donald Post, Gerald Blackburn, director, Annie Thorpe.

Wee Straightforward

The second play "Not Quite Such a Goose" was a perfectly straightforward piece, well within the range of the actors, who kept perfectly in character. The actors possessed flexible voices, were perfectly at ease and had natural on the stage and really "spoke to each other" in their lines rather than just repeating dialogue. The actors all working as in unit. Words of marks were given this play. The cast included Mrs. Bell, Mrs. Franklin Parrott; her son, Arthur, Gordon Hurst; her daughter, Sylvia, Helen Babcock; Philip Prick, Walter Barnard; Miss Henderson, Marion Miller. (president of the Y.P.S.). The play was directed by Mrs. Jack Barnett.

Mr. Donald Baxter, Picton, vice-president of the Belleville Presbytery Y.P.S. who has been in charge of the festival arrangements presented to Miss Mabel Martin, president of Wilton Young People, a handsome silver cup. He thanked all those who had assisted in the festivals and spoke of the experience and knowledge gained in entering the plays.

During the evening piano solos by Mrs. S. Graham were much enjoyed and added very interesting program, refreshments were served the visiting groups by the young people of Belleville United churches.

After the business session a short program followed which consisted of a reading by Mrs. S. J. West; reading by Mrs. H. Terry; a piano solo by Mrs. J. Short, and several contests.

Lunch was then served, bringing the meeting to a close.

The Trustee Board of the United Church met in the Parsonage on Friday evening, May 17th. Those present were, Rev. J. F. Lane, J. B. Ford, J. M. Defoe, Walter Morrow, C. D. Powell and H. J. Madill.

J. B. Ford was elected chairman and Walter Morrow was appointed Secretary-Treasurer.

It was decided to grant permission to the Women's Association to decorate the church and to make whatever alterations seemed necessary, the Board being heartily in accord with the ladies in this much needed work.

BEATTY DEFINES RAILWAY PLAN

Unified Management, Not Amalgamation Suggested

Toronto, May 21.—(CP)—E. W. Beatty, K.C., chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, told members of the Canadian Club Monday he wished to make clear his stand on railway problems in Canada and urged the listeners to consider the question "as one transcending party boundaries".

The President said his position had been misrepresented and he answered questions put forward in a recent speech by Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways. Mr. Beatty said he would like to ask the minister and other critics of his unification proposals, two questions:

"Can labor or others dependent on railway operation for their existence, be assured of employment, of stability or earnings, or of their present standard of living, if the industry on which they depend is unable to earn a return on the money invested.

"And, will a country like Canada prosper if one of its major industries cannot earn a fair wage if its population can be kept alive only by subsidies derived in the final analysis from general taxation?"

Beatty Plan

Mr. Beatty said, Dr. Manion first enquires "whether the amalgamated railway is to be under private or government control.

"Each is, in my plan, to remain the property of its owners; the combined system should be managed by a private company, since our experience with management by a company under direct control of the government has not been satisfactory. Government control of rates and service would be complete as now —would continue.

"The third question asked how much saving can be made by amalgamation under present traffic conditions. I have said it would take five years to complete bringing the railways under unified management which now amalgamation is what I suggest. After that I believe we can save $75,000,000 a year on a normal traffic volume taking the year 1930 as a normal traffic base. The Minister in his address certainly predicted a return to that level."

Division of Savings

"His third question enquires about the division of the savings to be made by amalgamation. The savings made by unified management, after each property has had its owners' net earnings equal to those which would have resulted if the properties continued to operate independently, would be divided on an equal basis, with at least one-half going to owners of the National Railways.

"His fourth question is how much capital expenditure will be necessary to effect the physical union of the railways, such as the Toronto Terminals and how can it be raised?" Capital expenditures would be made only where adequate savings would arise. . . The method of financing these expenditures . . . would be part of the unification agreement.

"An Absorption by C.P.R.

"Fifth question begins "if the Canadian National is to be absorbed by the Canadian Pacific, how much of the present deficit of $50,000,000 is Canadian Pacific to assume?" I have no idea that Canadian National is to be absorbed by Canadian Pacific it is not part of my proposal. I need not answer that question.

"The sixth question enquires what guarantees are to be given the owners of Canadian National Securities if Canadian Pacific is brought under Government ownership? Neither government ownership of the Canadian Pacific nor guarantee of its securities is part of my plan.

"The seventh question asks if "in case of amalgamation will the Canadian Pacific put in all its assets, or only part of them?" Amalgamation is not a description of my plan. Earnings each company would get out of the operated property would depend upon the assets and earning power which would be put in . . . I have already stated we would be prepared to put in all those assets which now form part of our transportation system, subject to such modifications as might be mutually agreed upon."

Care is Promised

In answers to the eighth and ninth questions the President gave his assurance "care will be used" regarding abandonment and said he would not be considered where they would "deprive communities of reasonable service" or "unification," and that compensation would be made to individual cases on their merits", to those who have located at railway terminals, shops or lowns.

"The tenth question," he added, "is "as the estimated savings necessarily must be made out of railway operating and maintenance expenses, and as from 60 to 65 per cent. of such expenses are made up of labor, what provision is proposed to provide for these displaced wage earners . . . I have repeatedly said the ordinary turn-over of railway labor is in the short time take care of most of this . . . If necessary, some savings of unified management could be used to secure compensation for labor displaced. . .

Mr. Beatty declared Hon. W. D. Euler of Kitchener displayed a willingness to discuss the problem in the light of realities and sketched the outline of a practical alternative to my proposal.

"The country, I believe, would like to have him pursue his exploration of the subject and to have the benefit of his final conclusions. Mr. Beatty added.

May Demonstrate Government Weed Killer in Hastings

Will Test Efficiency of Standard Chemical Against Weeds

East of Lake Superior alone in this country there are over 600 varieties of weeds grown on country farms. Out of this number the Ontario Department of Agriculture this year has chosen through an amendment to the present Weed Act, 24 of them to head the list as noxious weeds. Weeds cost Canada in the neighborhood of $25,000,000 per year. And as much as man may try he will never be completely eradicated; all the agriculturists can hope to do is keep them under control, weed inspectors of Hastings and Prince Edward Counties, who met in this city at Shire Hall yesterday for the annual meeting were told by J. H. McLeod, assistant director of the crops, seeds and weeds branch of the Department.

Entirely informal was the meeting which called together inspectors from the most remote points of both counties. Illustrating his talk with life-size specimens of plants, assisted by Mr. W. J. Stevens of the chemical division of the department, occupied the entire day outlining the new amended Weed Act and in explaining the various methods each company or district during the coming year.

Under the new amendments to the Act the following weeds are now listed as "obnoxious" weeds and must be sought into control through every means:

Canada Thistle; Blue Thistle; Bind Weed; Bladder Campion; Canada Thistle; Wild Carrot and Clover; Cockle;

Class B—Chicory; Ox-eye Daisy; Blue-weed; Hawkweed; Devil's Paintbrush; Milkweed; Wild Lettuce; Dock; Wild Mustard; Peppergrass; Stinkweed; Wild Oats; Ragweed; Golden Rod; Poison Ivy; Russian Thistle; Tumbling Mustard and Leafy Spurge.

Rag weed and poison ivy, it was pointed out, have been added to the list to protect the health and safety of residents of this county as well as tourists entering the country.

Demonstration Test

A demonstration test by the provincial government of a Hastings County of governmental approved chemical weed killers will be conducted through a number by Mr. Bowers and seconded by Mr. Belnap, passed by the meeting. A motion was made by Mr. Alexander and seconded by Mr. Ruby Platel, that Prince Edward County was also passed. The test will demonstrate the efficacy of a 4-per-cent chemical solution of thistle, blind weed and bladder, three of the most obnoxious weeds farmers of this section are called upon to fight.

Thirty weed inspectors for the counties will be appointed on June 1st, after which inspectors throughout the different territories will take up the work. Under a new regulation in the Weed Act, inspectors will be authorized as follows:

"Where the occupant or owner or land refuses or neglects to comply with the provisions of Section 5 of the Act in regard to clearing the land) any inspector appointed for the municipality in which such land is situate may cause the noxious weeds on such lands to be destroyed whenever he deems it necessary to do so to prevent the ripening of the seeds, and may charge the cost thereof against the land, to be collected in the same manner as municipal taxes."

STRIKE IS ENDED

Stratford, Ont., May 20 (CP)—Stratford's strike of relief workers which has affected approximately 100 men, ended today when the men voted almost unanimously to go back to work under the plan. In the future all relief in this city will be on a purely cash basis, the men to receive 40 cents an hour, with a maximum of 44 hours to a week. The relief project will be in full operation again Tuesday.

FEDERAL INCOME TAX EFFICIENCY

A tribute to the efficiency of the Federal Income Tax machinery is paid by the Ottawa Journal, which calls "these income tax people all-knowing, all-seeing, omniscient, omnipotent and a whole lot of other things." After this introduction the editor says:

They watch everything, note everything, record everything about everybody with money. If any one of us had a grandnuncle in Timbuctoo and he died and left us a few hundred grand, the Income Tax people would know about it before we had our hands on the cheque. If we made money in the stock market, or won the Irish Free State sweep, or got dividends from an oil well about which nobody ever heard, it would be all card-indexed here in Ottawa later, but more often sooner, and one fine day, assuming we didn't confess, there would be demand for Caesar's share. More than that, and worse, the Income Tax man these days doesn't knock twice.

Yet the Department, extraordinarily efficient, is not interested in making criminals. Concerned with making money, not jailbirds, it concentrates upon emphasizing that in filling out an income Tax form truth is safer than fiction. As a consequence and because many have discovered that honesty is the best policy, and even carelessness dangerous, there are surprisingly few prosecutions. Most of us have been taught responsibility.

And if the Income Tax people are inexorable, inescapable, they are also just. They will spend much time on a neglected letter to collect fifteen cents that they think a man owes to the Treasury but they will spend twenty cents just as readily adding back ten cents that a man may have overpaid to the Treasury.

Yet the cost of collecting the income tax is amazingly small. From 1917 to 1934 this tax has taken more than $1,000,000,000. The average cost of collection had been about 2.9 per cent. of the amount collected. In other words, it costs less than .03 cents to collect $1.00. A fine commentary upon the efficiency of the Income Tax people, it speaks well for our general honesty, too.

Income Tax figures are most interesting things. One of the things they show is that only two out of every hundred persons pay an income tax to other words, only two percent. of the population. It is something for the other 98 per cent. to remember.

The lion's share of the tax is paid by manufacturers. Financiers come next; then employes. The too common idea that retailers make money is not borne out by these figures. And so with professional men, doctors, lawyers, engineers. So, and much more so, with farmers.

The old saw about people marrying to pay their debts gets support from these figures. Certainly they show that, so far as Canada is concerned, married men are infinitely more prosperous than bachelors; they pay the Income Tax people four times more money. This despite that a lot of single men make returns.

Taken by and large, the Income Tax has been a success. People complain about it, as they complain always about taxes. Yet the Government pays money desperately, trying to get it honestly from those able to pay, is only doing its best. In persuading Mr. and Mrs. Taxpayer that it is wrong to pretend that a $1,200 was paid to a stenographer when the money was paid to the cook, the Income Tax collectors are not just trying to be nasty. Their primary purpose, as good servants of the State, is to help the Government meet the cost of things that most of us have clamored for.

ARMOR OF JOY

Some joys die soon, brief pleasures made
Like shadow-shapes, of sun and shade,
And with an hour on a day
Their flickering patterns fade away.

But other joys are deep and strong
And these will last, though years are long,
Unmarred by any chance or change,
Enduring while all else grows strange.

They arm the spirit and they keep
The spears of life from striking deep;
Their shining shield they interpose
Against the fierce onslaughts of foes.

Such gladness brings serenity
Where doubt and tumult used to be.
And with this armor girded well,
The soul stands up, invincible!

SUNDAY IS A BERTHDAY for the birth of wild rumors. With no newspapers to give the correct news someone starts a rumor and as it is passed from one to another, with each one adding a little, perhaps unconsciously, the rumor grows out of all proportion to whatever little truth it may contain. During the great war Sundays are always prolific of alarming rumors which only the publication of Monday newspapers dispelled. England tried an experiment once of a newspaper holiday for three days at Christmas time with the result that all kinds of alarming rumors sprang from nothing, grew to remarkable size and only the reappearance of the daily newspapers after the holiday dispelled a condition which might well have proved panicy. Hence Sunday rumors should be taken with a bit more than the proverbial grain of salt.

A FROG JUMPING CONTEST is the latest sport event to stir New York City, and frogs have been entered from various parts of the union, many coming by plane with their trainers, juvenile and adults. Graham McNamee, Clem McCarthy and other luminaries of the sport world will participate in the ceremonies. The contest will take place in Central Park and as much interest is being shown in the event the attendance is bound to be remarkable. Mark Twain wrote a story of a frog jumping contest in the olden, golden west which has attained world fame. The first frog did not win, if we remember rightly, for that contest was won by guile and deception. But the 1935 contest will be safeguarded from such so-to-speak by the speed and strength of the favorites, and the event will be strictly on the square. The centenary of Mark Twain's birth is responsible for the present day frog jumping contest.

INCREASING DEMAND FOR DIAMONDS may be looked upon as another evidence of the return of prosperity. The great Jonker diamond was sold in London a year ago for $400,000 and recently changed owners for nearly three-quarters of a million dollars. Seems like that is a hint to buy your diamonds now and avoid the rush later when the price starts to climb.

Letters to the Editor

CADETS

Belleville, Ont., May 19, 1935.
The Editor,
The Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir:

In Saturday's issue of the Ontario Intelligencer was a report that a motion for the abolition of Cadet training in the Collegiate, has been made by a member of the Board of Education.

Numerous letters have been published recently both for and against the present system. It will be interesting to see whether the majority of the Board members will be influenced by the ballyhoo raised by perhaps sincere but to my mind bigoted citizens.

It will be a test for the Board's broadmindedness.

It seems to me that there is a general indifference on the part of citizens when it comes time to elect Lecmembers for the Board of Education. This Board, which is one of the most important city institutions, should be made up of men whose broadmindedness, fairness and intelligence are above question. Can we say this of all members of the present Board? I for one would not say so.

It will be a pity if such an asset as abolition of the Cadet corps is railroaded through by some members whose only reason is based on their sincerity.

The last clause in the motion beginning "That all arms, ammunition and equipment, etc." appears to me to be especially silly. One would think that we have been threatening a force of Storm-Troopers whose power now had to be curbed.

If this motion is put through will it be fulfilling the wish of the majority of our citizens or will it be merely the triumph of a pet ambition of a group?

I would urge that the question be left to the voters to decide in the next municipal elections. It is questionable, to my mind, to say whether the board as at present constituted, is fit to have the power of deciding this matter, as Cadet Training.

We need better representation on our Board.

Respectfully yours,
A Bellevillian.

"The Editor, Ontario Intelligencer, Belleville, Ontario.

"Dear Sir:-

"After attending the nurses' graduation ceremony, at the Collegiate, I would like to rehearse some thoughts for the consideration of your readers.

"The Honorable Dr. J. A. Faulkner encouraged the nurses with phrases such as "be not discouraged there is plenty room at the top". "The nurse who is always willing to give her services, not questioning what pay she is to get will always find demand," "that if they do not get a chance to nurse at all, they are fitted for, usefulness in the community where they will leave further, that if newspapers would stop printing hard times reports we would be much the better."

"Let me say this, and I, Dr. Faulkner can refute it, I would like to hear from him. Unemployed and those in financial difficulties are forced to use up all equity they possess and then beg of the lawyer to sustain them in idleness, A state of affairs creeling suicide, murder, liars, evaders, and not least sorrow and grief.

"Why all this? BECAUSE we elect men to be statesmen to hunt down cheaters and to hunt out bondholders parasited to regular hours of labor that all workers would get their share of the chance to spend and thus they could do their share of consuming and have to work.

"But listen they come back with this kind of claptrap, "just as well off as other countries, lack of room at the top", etc. I can accept this phrase only in this way, that room and space is all there is at the top, not opportunity.

"Space is all that will be there till we stop carrying on relief and public utilities on bandholders' money.

"Would it be possible that a full stomach a salary of eight or ten thousand per year and an account to charge expenses to, is dimming the vision of want, misery, grief and plea for justice.

"Now in the words of "TINY TIM" may GOD bless every one of us.

"George Elliott."

Amusement Tax

(Peterborough Examiner)

It Goes Too Far Down the Scale

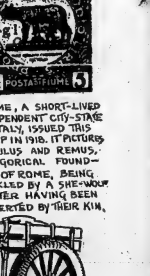
Premier Hepburn has intimated that there will be nothing raised by the amusement picture business protesting against the extension of the amusement tax announced a few days ago.

The Government has made up its mind, and the new taxes which are to be used for relief purposes will become operative at once.

While The Examiner approves of the Government's decision to pay for relief out of current revenue and recognizes that additional taxation will be needed to make that course possible and while we also endorse Premier Hepburn's argument that those who can afford to pay for luxuries can afford to be taxed for relief, we are still of the opinion that a mistake is being made in extending the amusement tax so that a child's matinee ticket will be taxed two cents and patrons who pay 25 cents admission will be taxed five cents.

This, we submit, is pressing down too hard upon those who can least afford to pay, and it should be possible to obtain the revenue aimed at without having to take so much away from children.

Why could it not have been possible to ask those who can afford to buy expensive imported liquors and wines to pay a special tax for relief; instead the prices of these commodities have been lowered so that drinking becomes a cheaper luxury, while at the same time the tax is clapped upon the cheaper forms of entertainment.



Those imported liquors and wines are luxuries, and those who have the money to buy such beverages could not complain if they were called upon to make a special payment for relief purposes.

MONA LISA MODEL WIFE OF A NOBLE

Woman Model of Famous Painting Had Been Falsely Identified

Yellow Springs, Ohio, May 21—(AP)—For 400 years the woman with the enigmatic smile was posed for the famous painting "Mona Lisa" has been falsely identified, Prof. Raymond E. Stites asserted today.

Dr. Stites, Professor of Aesthetics at Antioch College, said he has proof from twelve years of research into the life of Leonardo da Vinci that the woman was Isabelle d'Este Marchioness of Mantua.

Reference books are incorrect, Dr. Stites said, in identifying the model for Leonardo's masterpiece as Madonna Lisa, Neapolitan wife of Zanobi, or Francesco del Giocondo.

Georgio Vasari, an Italian writer, made the original error forty years after the death of Leonardo in 1519, in copying a manuscript by Cadelac, a Florentine, "and every one since then has carried the error along," Dr. Stites said.

Estimating the value of the painting, which now hangs in the Louvre, as "about a million dollars" the professor said, "Until now the painting has been of more or less a mythical person. Now one begins to understand why the Mona Lisa has always been so popular. It is the portrait of one of the noblest and most perfect women of the Renaissance."

The professor's identification of the model for Leonardo was obtained from Count di Siri.

Examining Leonardo's writings, Dr. Stites found no mention of Madonna Lisa, but only the statement that Leonardo painted a portrait of her husband, Piero Francesco.

From Leonardo's writings, he established that the famous artist made the profile drawings of Isabella, Marchioness of Mantua, who was the wife of Marquis Gonzaga, whose "victories and honors over the court of Charles VIII is considered the first modern battle between nations."

Dr. Stites said he found the profile drawings included on a medal by Christopher Romano, in the Imperial Museum in Vienna, and impressed on Leonardo's memory. He withheld announcement of his discovery of true identity of the "Mona Lisa" until more recent studies enabled him to identify the statute of Isabella in the British Museum.

ACID VAT EXPLODES BURNING THREE MEN

Toronto, May 21—Gas, forming in an acid vat used in bonding rugs and dirt from metals in the plating department of the Rogers-Majestic Company plant, caused an explosion yesterday which sent three men to hospital suffering from second-degree burns on the upper portion of their bodies.

Arthur Parker, 32, of 335 Pape Avenue, according to reports from the Toronto Western Hospital last night, was in the most serious condition, having been burned about the face and hands. The other two men, also severely burned, were Frank McHugh, 60 Spruce Hurst Avenue, and Edward Whitton, 60 Jarvis Street.

The explosion occurred when a tank from another part of the plant was placed in a larger wooden vat containing "pickles", a solution of water and acid. First aid was immediately given the injured men and they were then taken to the Western Hospital.

Minstrel Show Held in Tweed Plays to Capacity Audiences

Tweed—Undoubtedly the most successful event of its kind ever staged in Tweed was the Minstrel Show given by local and Sulphide talent under the auspices of Tweed-Sulphide Band, recently organized. On Wednesday night the show was given in the Opera House to a packed house, every available seat being filled and standing room at a premium. The excellence of the show made the talk of the town and the surrounding district. So great was the demand for tickets for the performance on the same afternoon on Friday night that an "SRO" sign had to be hung up and over a hundred people turned away. An audience estimated at five hundred and fifty was packed into every available space. Never in the history of the auditorium has such a crowd clamoured for admission. The receipts of the two shows amounted to over $300 and will be devoted to purchasing equipment for the band.

At seven-thirty the band of thirty pieces led the procession of black-faced comedians in a parade about the town. It was the band's first public appearance since its organization six weeks previously. The streets were lined with people who later made their way to the hall.

The success of the show is due to the untiring efforts and enthusiasm of W. E. Dark, bandmaster, of Ed Keith, President of Tweed-Sulphide Musical Society, and to an excellent committee composed of Messrs T. Cahill, B.A., Gil Ostrom, H. Connor, Staff Cassidy, Ray Quinn, Jim Corbett. The stage decorations were the work of Messrs Clayton Arbuckle and Ken Bews. The lighting effects for the second part of the programme was in the hands of M. R. Rose, local electrician. The loyal support and co-operation of the Sulphide boys was in no small way responsible for the success of the performance.

The organization was particularly fortunate in its choice of interlocutor, Ovila La Fontaine, whose performance was splendid and called for much favorable comment. He was ably supported by Ed Way, Jack Brennan, Borden Rollins, Alex Wallace, Alex Simpson and George Clark, as end men, whose humorous "gags" made an instant hit with the crowd. Part one of the show opened with "Happy Days" by the entire company, jokes were contributed by Jim Corbett, Norman Bowers and Harry Orter. One of the best features of this part of the programme was a lively dance by Bill Courtney which called for an encore. Roger Rose and Jim Luffman were also called back following their excellent banjo duet. "Oh Susanna" by the chorus concluded the first part of the show.

The band opened Part II with a band selection. In introducing the Band and its leader, Mr. W. E. Dark, Mr. W. S. Tummon, M.P., referred to the excellent work done by Mr. Dark in organizing and presenting to the public in such a brief time a band composed of young fellows. A lively one quarter had everyplayed an instrument before.

Borden Rollins made an instant hit with the crowd. Tom Beatty and George McCutcheon contributed an amusing skit "Paying a Bet" which found the wheezing George bound in a wheelbarrow.

The feature of the entire programme was the "plantation scene". This scene depicted a log cabin silhouetted against the cedars—dusky but among the bushes"—a typical negro dwelling. The curtain rose on an evening scene with the lighting giving the effect of moonlight. The darkies—M. R. Rose, Stan Luffman, Dr. M. G. Dales, Omer Edgley and Ernie Wallace are seated in front of the cabin with Rose and Luffman strumming on their banjos. Old Tom Moses (Frank Bews) has retired to rest. Sons of the body —Gil Ostrom, N. Bowers, H. Connor, Jim Corbett, Jim Wallace and Harry Grier—on their way to their new jobs on the railway stop at the cabin to see their old friend Uncle Moses, and to sing about the old familiar songs so dear to the darkies' heart. And so, one by one, are sung "In the evening by the moonlight" "Old Black Joe" (this number was sung by Uncle Moses (Frank Tummon) in a particularly pleasing manner). "I've been working on the railroad", "Way down upon the Swanee River", "Are you from Dixie", "Golden Slippers" and "Swing to sindy war no more".

The applause for this Item continued for some minutes showing that it had touched a responsive chord. It was the general opinion that it alone was worth the price of admission. Following this number Jack Brennan kept the audience in spasms of laughter with his famous "Stuttering Speech".

Just before the closing chorus "Dixie Land", Miss Lois Richardson, whose faithful work as accompanist during the rehearsals and the two performances had contributed in no slight degree to the success of the entertainment, was called to the platform and was presented by Mr. Dark, on behalf of the Tweed-Sulphide Musical Society, with a beautiful leather music case. Miss Richardson was taken quite by surprise The National Anthem brought to a close a most successful show. The popularity of the performance is shown by the demand that is in the ring made for a third appearance locally.

Amendments to Weed Act Explained by Inspector

John D. McLeod, Meets County Inspectors at Shire Hall

Reeves, deputy reeves and weed inspectors from throughout Hastings County gathered at Shire Hall this morning on the occasion of the annual weed meeting held by John D. McLeod, assistant director of noxious weeds and weed branch of the Department of Agriculture. The meeting which will be continued during the afternoon today was one of the largest ever held.

Under the new Weed Act passed recently by the Dominion Government and now being prepared for printing, weed inspectors of the various municipalities will have several new clauses, differing from three of the old Act, in part into effect during the coming summer. The new Act will embrace cemeteries, roads, suburban properties and vacant lots in cities, towns and villages.

The golden rod, floral glory of the country side pretty as it may be, the ox-eye daisy and other hardy flowering plants of the countryside has no part in the present day scheme of things and must be controlled by battle with all the energy with which they are capable, warned Mr. McLeod at the meeting. Only the grasses are tolerated in the ideal of weedless husbandry. Various communities have their own best remedies to combat noxious weeds in the growth of grass along side the roads of the country and boulevards of the city.

On Annual Tour

The meeting was opened by Mr. Jos. Wilson, Stirling, agricultural representative of this district who introduced Mr. McLeod to the large gathering. Mr. McLeod now on his annual tour of various counties commenced his lectures in Essex and Kent Counties in February. He will continue across Ontario to the Quebec boundary.

Briefly Mr. McLeod outlined the newer clauses of the recently amended Weed Act. He pointed to the fact, that the first Weed Act passed in this country in the year 1804 named only one noxious weed, the Canada Thistle...At the present time scores of weeds are named and must be recognized and fought.

Milkweed, Russian Thistle and a few more weeds are the only ones not named.

"The main purpose of the Weed Act is not to create hardship for anyone, but is designed to help the agriculturist," pointed out the speaker. Failure to urging his inspectors on to greater activity in order to control the rapid spread of the weed menace, he stated.

The majority of weeds along the roadside are from threshing machines it was pointed out. These machines under the new Act will be licensed at a fee of one dollar per year and will be subject to control through the local weed inspectors. Automobiles are only one means of spreading seeds from country to city. Seeds find their into the air with the dust raised by the machine, he said.

Under the Clean Grain Act owing to complaints of eastern farmers of seed shipped in from the west, it will become necessary for retailers in the seed business to have western seed re-cleaned before selling in Ontario.

"A good weed inspector should be courteous, know his weeds and spend a lot of common sense in the enforcement of the law with which he is entrusted," warned Mr. McLeod.

PEDDLESDEN—COLLINS

St. Edmund's Church, Sloco, was the scene of a pretty wedding on Monday morning, May 20th, when Priscilla Kathleen, daughter of the late William Collins and of Mrs. Collins, Moira, became the bride of Frank Arthur Peddlesden, Trenton, son of Mr. Herbert Peddlesden and the late Mrs. Peddlesden.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father D. A. Cullinane, of Sloco, assisted by Rev. Father E. A. Corkery, Wooler, at nine-thirty o'clock.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. William Collins, was a lovely frock of white satin, fashioned on long-fitted lines and a long, hand-embroidered silk net veil draped from a crown of orange blossoms, completed a bouquet of shell pink and white Premier roses.

Miss Geraldine Collins was her sister's bridesmaid and was attired in a pretty frock of flowered chiffine, in shades of white, yellow and tea rose. Her hat was a picture model of tea rose hat with yellow ribbon. She carried a bouquet of Talisman roses.

Mr. Vincent Long, Glen Miller, was groomsman.

Wedding music was played by Mrs. Joseph Tully, Lindsay, and the soloist was Mrs. Ivan McGrath, Flint, Mich., and Miss Priscilla McAvoy, Tweed.

After the ceremony, wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's mother, to which many present. The rooms were prettily decorated in pink and white. The table was charming with streamers of these shades; they hung from a basket of pink and white sweet-pea in rose petal shape.

Mrs. M. Collins, mother of the bride, was gowned in a navy and white crepe ensemble.

Later, Mr. and Mrs. Peddlesden left on a wedding trip to Quebec City and St. Anne de Beaupre, the bride travelling in a grey crepe coat with navy trimming and matching hat and accessories. On their return they will reside in Trenton.

TANGLED LIVES

By ANN FORESTER

Three days —strange, busy days. —then the cold, crisp morning of the wedding.

Jessie awoke to find Kitty standing at the foot of the bed regarding her. Strangely sober, Kitty's face, and Kitty's eyes were solemn and a little frightened. Even the jaunty note in Kitty's voice was a trifle false.

"Do you know you sleep beautifully, Joy? I've seen so many people sleep and most of them snort and gurgle and their teeth—but you lie there looking as lovely as the sleeping beauty. . . . It's a girl thing."

Then Kitty's poise broke. She sat on the beautiful edge of the bed and grasped the girl's slim hands. "Your wedding day, Joy . . . Oh, honey, do you think you're making a mistake? I've asked you that slight —it has me urged you into this—oh, Joy darlin', I feel so guilty. I'm a wicked woman, Joy, I'm a wicked woman."

"You're a dear old chump!" Joyce replied. "I'm not a baby, Kitty, I know what I'm doing. I'm lucky—lucky, I tell you!"

Lucky . . . she whispered it to the little faced girl who looked back at her from the mirror of the dresser when she dressed later on. Of course she was lucky! Pull out the new dress —the coat with the rich fur collar—the the three-strand wrist watch which was Roger Cameron's gift to his bride. Now just she was—that was excitement, of course. A little rouge would help matters.

"Mrs. Roger Cameron . . ." she whispered to the girl who was watching her from the mirror. Joyce Allen —the bride of the Commercial House was going to marry Roger Cameron. . . . How strange life could be!

Amid the faded red velvet and gilt of a bygone day, Roger Cameron was awaiting his bride. A little grim, perhaps, that during Lloyd Wray's or had remained to see his old friend married. A minister made the usual jokes and Roger could be looked up at the door as Joyce and Kitty entered the room.

Lloyd Weaver bowed stiffly to Joyce, and the ghost of a mischievous impulse to laugh. Astonishing Norman's father should be witnessing her wedding to Roger Cameron! This was a dream—a strange dream. . . . was this really Joyce Allen standing here before this minister being married.

Cold night shading between faded red hangings, falling on Roger Cameron's spare figure, painfully erect.

Falling on a slim white faced girl with eyes like drenched violets.

A solemn little child gripping the old fashioned roses in the minister's voice sounding above the patter of rain on the windows.

"Dearly beloved, we are gathered here today . . ."

THE SPLENDID WORLD

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

Some years flow by so tranquilly so uneventfully, that they seem like sluggish rivers. But the long years which followed her impulsive marriage seemed to Joyce to gush forth like a mountain torrent.

Brimming years, filled with color and movement. Flooded with new ideas, rushing to newer, more splendid sights. Years filled with a sort of graded happiness that was wonder of the world, even as her heart catapulted to Roger Cameron's kindness.

Despite its grey beginning this strange marriage was a success. From the first his sudden resolution seemed to fill Roger with new strength. He chuckled over the joke he had played on Cora Ivy even snarking with malicious enjoyment at the biting letters she had written when she learned of the elopement. A letter by the way, which caught up with him in Europe; true to his promise, Roger had set out immediately upon his travels. With Kitty and Joyce he spent a leisurely year travelling over Europe, lingering in the sunshine of the Riviera.

A strange trio, and a strange agreement—and perhaps the strangest thing about it was that it succeeded in bringing happiness to each of the three.

Business and work were left behind him. A short time lay before him in which to snatch color and life and old Roger pursued with hands in greedily.

Now he realized that he had been lonely all of his life. He had had many business acquaintances and friends. Now a rare friendship had sprung up between him and Kitty. By no means a placid friendship, for they would argue by the hour, and Kitty's emphatic opinions and snapping blue eyes would fill the old man with secret enjoyment, even while he stubbornly refused to give in.

Quite as strong —though more tender an attachment had sprung up in Roger's heart for his young wife. To the old man, she was something between the consecrated memory he had had of his first wife and her he had never had. She formed his standard of all that is fine and the world through her eyes. He was interested in all with consequence to her, delighting in surprising her with some gift he had heard her express a desire for, delighting to see her please her.

He, who had for years worn the same nondescript grey suit and black ties, now took a pride in dressing well in clothes. But they were Joyce's clothes. He liked to see her in rich furs, in soft bright colors that was secretly delighted when she consulted him about the new gown she bought in Paris.

Lying back in his invalid's chair and finding contraption which travelled with him wherever he went, the old man would gravely consider the merits of a negligee or an evening gown as Joyce walked up and down before him for his approval. This was color and beauty, this was youth . . . and filled that was her hunger for rochance in his heart.

To his hotel apartments came dealers in gems, spreading out their wares for his selection. Surrounded by his quilted robe, the old man would sit fingering the gems, considering, rejecting, choosing with the same deep absorption with which he had been given to considering the meeting of the Riverton Bank with the Farmer's Saving Association. Quite as important—the selection of these gems, to a man who has only a few more years to live, and more satisfying, for these lovely trinkets had color and brilliance and life in them they would clasp Joyce's white throat or sparkle on her fingers.

Something of youth seemed to flow to him through Joyce. Those days had known the silent, almost sour grey man of Riverton would never have suspected this new Roger Cameron.

But perhaps it was in Joyce herself that the greatest change took place. Very different, Mrs. Roger Cameron from the rebellious Joyce Allen of the Commercial House.

The old man's indulgence did not spoil her. She recognized it for what it was, a pathetic eagerness to grasp life before it was too late.

There was in Joyce a rare sense of fair play. There was a bargain which she had struck. Roger Cameron was giving her security—love? —luxury, in return, she gave him a devoted companionship. She collected little interesting anecdotes on her daily walks, and brought them back to Roger's invalid chair to display to him as he displayed the gems, told him her way the his stories of the different countries they visited, and it was entitled to Joyce by the old man's shrewd observations on human nature.

She grew to appreciate the depths and the true delicacy of Roger Cameron's mind, never guessing how her own was deepening and growing every day.

Books of travel and intelligent companionship and there was little bit of the shallow, pretty girl who had run away from Riverton. This was a poised and gracious woman that she wore. A cosmopolite from the crown of her shining brown hair to the soles of her expensively shod feet.

"She has changed from a woman could want!" exclaimed the wife of a French banker whom Joyce had met in Paris, and there was the air of envy in her tone, "beauty and youth and a love that is wonderful to adores her. And such clothes—my dear! Such colors!"

Kitty overheard the remark and she quoted it to Joyce with much glee.

The Joy's amile echoed Kitty's booming laugh as they looked at each other when Joyce was left alone.

Yes, the French banker's wife was correct—she had everything. She, who had risen at dawn to the misery of the factory whistle —she who had tramped the streets of the city, and all the luxury wealth could buy. She was lucky. . . .lucky! What if there was a loneliness within her at times? What if there was a strange restlessness amounting almost to panic. Like a slipping away? . . . That's all . . . Life was a beautiful shell, enclosing hollow emptiness.

Jim Keith, first officer of the liner Neptune Queen, which plied from Chicago to Shanghai glanced sharply along the table as he took the chair at the head.

Their first meal was in the nature of a get-to-know-you affair. The modern ocean liner is like some huge floating hotel in the use of space. The little handfuls of humans are vastly dependent upon one another. There is the little population of a planet, forced to be content and companionable with those who have also shipped passage for the trip.

These people, reflected Jim Keith sitting along the table headed by Captain Bligh, were his enforced companions at meal times. Morning, noon and night he would see them—amuse them—flatter them with his attentions, that their voyage might be a pleasant one and they book their future passages on the Neptune.

This was the part of Keith's work that he liked the least. Something a little mocking in those dark eyes as they travelled down the table.

The usual fat couple from the middle west who had died old dirt farm to an advantage and were setting out to see the world. The inevitable flirtatious widow determined to catch his eyes. To avoid this he kept his head resolutely to the other side of his chair.

The passengers were better. Across from the widow was a big framed wholesome woman with snapping brown eyes, and they streaked with honest grey. Beside her, a girl. . . . Jim Keith caught his breath. The red headed girl he had seen standing in the doorway as he took the chair. A beauty, and no mistake!

Outside of his social duties as first officer of the Neptune, Keith had not specially interested in women. But the sight of this girl standing resplendent in red moved him to unusual interest. He had even prompted to find out her name—Cameron—Cameron—that was it!

He leaned forward.

"By the way, Miss Cameron, I'm glad to have had the opportunity to ask how your father is standing the trip? I saw them bring him aboard at Chicago."

"Mr. Cameron is feeling very well. We used to travel, you know, and he's a splendid sailor. But you —you're made a mistake. Mr. Cameron is not my husband—not my father."

The others at the table might not have existed in that moment while their eyes met and held together. A queer change in Jim Keith's face—the merest difference of expression as when a wind ruffles the surface of a pond.

Though her lips were set in a polite little smile, Joyce felt her cheeks burning at the suspicion of a sneer in the man's dark eyes. Antagonism leaped like a flame between them.

JIM KEITH

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

Life on shipboard takes on an artificial gayety. The past has dropped below the horizon. The future is lost in the fogs ahead. But the present is very much on deck, very much to be coped with at the moment.

Nervous activity descends on the passengers. There is no routine—no serious work to be done. They are confronted by empty days and they must fill with play and false contents.

By the second day ship life was well under way. Manhood tennis matches, whirling flirtations were begun and mounting rapidly. Deck games were the order of the day. Ship concerts were being planned, and arrangements made for the evening dances.

It would be a smooth trip—that meant much social life, thought Jim Keith and grimly found himself hoping for a storm. Confound a job which counted making himself agreeable to passengers as one of its duties! The men weren't so bad . . . one could always find a common ground of work with a man. But women—why was it women— so many women—seemed to throw off all inhibitions when they came on board ship and carried on in a manner they would never dream of following on shore?

But there was nothing of these unchartable thoughts visible in the young officer as he laughingly tried to evade the determined advances of the flirtatious widow who had waylaid him on the promenade deck.

"Now, Mr. Keith, you really must come on down to my cabin for a little visit. Mrs. Keith will make it quite as often to me that I really feel we're old friends, you know!"

"Mrs. Keith! Did you say so—" Jim Keith was groping in his memory for years of dances, of dining, placing her as a straw colored blonde whom he had frequently seen with a perfectly unknown man. "But you know, Mrs. Calhoun, my job is not all pleasure—some of it is work." Glad to himself Jim Keith fiercely added "particularly on this trip!"

Nothing straw colored about this widow. She was a decided blonde—if very decidedly artificial. Gold fillings matched the glit of her hair, her teeth glittered, her fingernails glittered, her eyes, between their heavily painted lashes glittered with the light of one who sights her prey.

But Jim Keith had no intention of being prey. A little ruthlessly he broke through the widow's coy insistence and started to the ladder which led to his own quarters.

It was then he became aware that there had been a spectator to the little tableau.

Lying back in a steamer chair with her feet propped on the rail who sat at his table. She held an open magazine on her lap, but it was no doubt a blind to the mind that she had been listening—and enjoying the discomfiture.

He bowed stiffly— receiving a proud inclination of her head in return as he passed. Again there was that electric moment when eyes clung to eyes—and again Joyce felt a lightning play of hostility between them.

Joyce's eyes followed the tall white figure as it passed up the deck. The ship's officers had changed to white linen on the second day out, the gold and brass buttons were especially becoming to Jim Keith, lending his dark, saturnine good looks into vivid contrast.

But . . . something inimical about the . . . thought Joyce, something about the little mocking smile in the depths of his dark eyes which struck sparks from her temper.

She didn't want to think about Jim Keith. She wanted to lie here impervious to all but the lilting and swirling of the ship . . . watching a sapphire horizon rise and fall beyond the white rail.

Joyce fastened her eyes on her unfinished story, but,instead of the printed words she found herself thinking of Jim Keith's lean, dark face . . . wondering how he came to be first officer of a ship on the far western run—from his crisp accent he was evidently of English birth.

When she realised she was sitting there thinking about the man she disliked, she shut the magazine in irritation and went down to the cabin.

But this was merely exchanging the frying pan for the fire. To her half angry surprise, Joyce found that Roger had a visitor, Dr. Mc-Manus, the ship's doctor, who was already embarked on the subject of Jim Keith.

Interrupted momentarily by Joyce's arrival, the doctor fell to time in getting back to what was undoubtedly a favorite subject, for Joyce knew she can't pick one's associates in this business. But, after all, something is due a gentleman. . . . I made the mistake of confiding in Captain Bligh, when I first came on this run—but this fellow, Keith, has the English reserve down pat. He believes in him implicitly, and—" the doctor spread his pudgy hands in laughing resignation—"I could do no more without endangering my own position.

Sketches by U.S. Writer

In April, 1931, Lawrence was visited by H. Dudley Finch, correspondent, H. T. Russell, who wrote a series of articles for the newspapers regarding the mystery man which were cabled from Plymouth. Following are extracts from them:

Aircraftsman T. E. Shaw, once that romantic "Lawrence of Arabia," whose words and law from Aleppo to Mecha, who wielded Arabian princes and potentates and tribesmen into a steel force and swept the Turkish armies from the desert; who built an empire and lived as a dictator, has but two small ambitions, perhaps Aircraftsman Shaw would prefer to call them desires rather than ambitions for "ambition" to his mind, "is the cause of most of mankind's evils."

His two desires are merely: to experience the thrill of leaping from an aeroplane with a parachute; to write for a living without being conscious of the remains of his name.

A Contented Man

"You are up against a contented being," he wrote in one of his several letters to me before he agreed to break his long silence. And he added that he was simply a very ordinary and pleased creature, whose position in the R.A.F. forbids him to give interviews for publication." Nevertheless, there was no ban on "conversation."

"You will recognize me easily," he wrote when he finally agreed to meet me. "The R.A.F. wears a dull, grey-blue-green uniform like soldiers, but more scruffy. In this I am as inconspicuous and unimpressive figure, about five and a half feet high, with a face the colour of a boiled lobster."

And when he met me, grinning broadly, at the top of the steps from which the Plymouth Fathers embarked on the Mayflower 320 years ago, he were over his "scruffy" uniform a black rubber coat.

"I'm Shaw", he said simply, and under his guidance we descended the slope to water level and entered his American speedboat for the trip across the sound.

"She's the nippiest thing in these waters," he said proudly.

Then, perched at Mount Batten, the Royal Air Force station. And there he described to me the philosophy that enabled him to live happily on 50 cents a day, his soldier's pay.

Ambition An Evil

Ambition, first of all, seems to him "The cause of most of mankind's evils." This applies to his personal ambition and the ambition of nations—commercial rivalry and the disarmament. If the Egyptians had ambition, he says, they could easily rid their land of British occupational forces in a decade. If mankind had not illusions about the Italians with ambition, he adds, Italy probably would revert to the peace status in which Caesar found it. Ten years, in his opinion, is sufficient time in which to make or break a nation—or a man.

And there are various kinds of personal ambitions which Lawrence has comprehended. Why should he receive letters—a dozen a day—asking for his autograph? Strange ambition, that, to have a man's signature.

Again and again in the theme of ambition—the reason "Shaw" is here in the ranks. He has "nothing" with motor oil, his face blackened by grit and grease, "nothing" once connected with princes!

"I am far more contented than when I was Col. T. E. Lawrence," he went on. He said, "Most of these others want something. Some want richer. Some want women. Some want rank. I want nothing. I have had almost everything worth trying in life. I have had wealth. I have had power. I am sick and tired of it all. You must have had all this to know what it is worth."

Has Few Real Friends

"I have no friends—only millions of admirers. I have no time to interest in women. To me, all food is but fuel for energy and pastry, I don't like oysters. I've not fond of pastry — tastes like a gravel. In fact, I have no likes and no dislikes worth mentioning."

Lawrence it felt to be subordinate to a corporal—this Col. T. E. Lawrence who had been in command the orders of field marshals when he commanded the Arabian desert. It is enjoyable after having unlimited power, to have no responsibility at all, and to be told to a discussion of his future plans.

Future Plans

"I am an archaeologist," he said, "but since my admission in the desert in which I want to explore are banned territories to me. I want to go Egypt. The French won't, allow me through Syria, of their territory. Turkey won't have me."

He paused, smiled, then pointing a finger at himself:

"Look at me," he said, "I am a dangerous man."

He laughed at his own sarcastic reference to his small stature.

"They say I entered the R.A.F. because of bad health; Sons say I was riddled with bullets; other say I was verging on a nervous breakdown following my experiences in the desert. You can't become a member of the R.A.F. if you are physically or mentally unfit. I joined the R.A.F. simply because I was sick and tired of politics. I wanted a job at which I could work with my hands as I used to when I conducted excavations.

Traditions in England made my desire difficult to fulfil. Wherever I went I was expected to bow with the head or one of the heads of the firm. Nothing, you see, could be "good enough" for Colonel Lawrence. Once a colonel, always a colonel. That is a colonel should want to do work generally considered to be 'above' what a colonel should do was unthinkable.

Indulges Own Whims

"In England rank counts for much. There are certain things which are 'not done' when you rank here. For one thing, you do not, as a rule, repair machines when you are in a position to order some one else to repair them for you. I like repairing machines.

"I enjoy tinkering with machinery. If I can't ride as a colonel, then I want to do it as a private. So I am a private."

Being waited upon hand and foot as he was during his war in the desert, he explained, was monotonous after a time. Having rank and responsibility entailed constant to politicians, he said, was obnoxious to him.

You don't have to be the College of a government when you are a private in the air force, he contended.

"That is one reason why I refused decorations and other honours offered me," he continued. "Had I accepted them at the time they would have shut my mouth by refusing them I was able to speak my mind. I have been in struggle with cabinet ministers, and others, I got the government thanks to Winston Churchill, to fulfil as many promises made to the Arabs during the war as it was humanly possible and practicable to fulfill. Then I got tired of it all, grew up all of which I was sick and tired and chose to enter the R.A.F.

Refuses Decorations

How at Buckingham palace he refused two decorations from the hands of the King of England himself was revealed by Air-craftsman T. E. Shaw (Lawrence of Arabia), the man who during the war, ousted the Turks from the desert and put Arabia on the map.

After his work in rallying to the allied cause, thousands of Arabs in the desert, the British government sought to honor him.

It offered him money; he refused. It offered him a title; he also turned them down.

In the same way he spurned decorations which, he said, would have "shut my mouth."

Coveted Honours

He said "you would not take a thing until the government had fulfilled promises made by him to the Arabs on behalf of Britain. In spite of these objections, officials forced him that he had been recommended for two coveted honours: G.B.E. (commander of the bath) and D.S.O. (distinguished service order).

Despite his protests both the awards were gazetted and he was summoned to Buckingham Palace to meet the King.

"I was ushered into the presence of the King," he said. "He was kind enough to chat about my job in the desert, imagine my surprise, when, in spite of my protests and refusals to the government, the King motioned to two decorations which lay on a nearby table, and explained that they were intended for me!

"Immediately I understood that when officials suggested I was to be honoured, I objected. I explained that satisfied officialdom should have brought about the circumstances. And I told him that my previous decision not to accept the decorations must stand.

Awkward Incident

"Naturally the whole thing was most awkward 21 was neither the fault of the King, nor mine. The officials had no business to recommend me against my with.

"Many versions of this incident have been circulated. It is said that I went to the palace in Arab costume. I did go there in uniform in the army at the time and went in my uniform.

"I have heard it said that the King pinned one decoration to my breast coat. I know that I had removed it when he went to pin the second one. This and other versions may sound better than the original, but they are not true.

"Nothing could induce me more awkward and unpleasant than what actually occurred."

King Was King

Although, in refusing the decorations, Lawrence complained bitterly to the King of the manner in which the cabinet had dealt with the Arab question, he ill feeling resulted.

"The King," he said, "was most kind and understanding."

Several months later Lawrence again saw the King. This time he went to Buckingham palace in Arab costume. He acted as interpreter between the King and Feisul, king of Iraq. The King recalled Lawrence's previous visit on this occasion and spoke to him cordially.

When the King heard that Lawrence was publishing his new book on Seven Pillars of Wisdom, he instructed his secretary, Lord Stamfordham, to offer a subscription. He meant thus to forestall a possible hint by Lawrence because he had learned of the high value of the edition ($150). But Lawrence wrote to say that in calculating the sale price of his edition he had planned to work off a special presentation copy for the King. He asked, therefore, that the King should be willing to accept one in the circumstances. The King agreed. The book subsequently was placed in his private library.

On one visit to the palace when Lawrence was describing his war in the desert in answer to questions the King asked him if he did not have something which could be added to (in his King's) unique collection of war curiosities. Lawrence suggested several objects, including one which had been intimately connected with the latter. The King smilingly declined the latter. Finally he accepted a gift.

Legal Status Doubtful

Speaking of the decorations which he refused, Lawrence pointed out that he was actually in doubt to this day as to the legal status of his case.

"I am in the unusual position of having refused decorations which have been gazetted. To the best of my knowledge the announcements in the Gazette have not been cancelled. So I presume that legally I might be entitled to them, although I refused to take them from the King. But the matter is indifferent to me."

Impracticable Promises

A number of the promises made to the inhabitants of the desert, said Lawrence never could have been carried out. At one time, for instance, he said, there was talk of creating an Arab federation:

"On paper this looked all right," he said, "but in practice it would have worked out hopelessly."

The point was, he said, that vast stretches of desert would have separated member tribes. There could not, he added, have existed proper political unity between tribes who had no telephones, telegraphs or railways connecting their respective territories, camels being the sole mode of transport in the desert.

His struggles to obtain what he wanted for the Arabs during the Paris peace conference, he said, were complicated by Franco- British bargaining.

Among the French, he said, Clemenceau behaved splendidly toward him and the Arabs, while in the end Britain induced France to pave the way for Feisul in exchange for a mandate over Syria, which they received at the expense of the Syrians!

Some time passed and reached a serious stage. Lawrence was asked to serve an important post in connection with Arabian affairs.

He refused.

He said he would not work under certain members of the cabinet.

He had words even with one of them in particular at a meeting in Downing street.

Finally he was induced to accept a temporary post as "adviser" to Winston Churchill. It was through this, he said, that he got what he wanted for "my Arabs".

MODERN CHURCH IS DEFENDED AT SUNDAY SERVICE

Rev. Mr. Rowland is Speaker at Stirling Church

RUNAWAY CAR

Baseball Game Has to be Called on Account of Darkness

Stirling, May 21.—On Sunday morning Rev. R. W. Rowland of St. Paul's Church, speaking before a large congregation delivered a most impressive sermon in defence of the present day church.

Turning back in biblical history to the life of John the Baptist, he made the analogy of a man standing alone for the cause when he knew to be right, a revolutionist of his day, at war against injustice, sin, and wrong doing in every phase of life. If it was wrong for a poor man to resort to trickery, it was also wrong for Kings and princesses to do likewise. Taking this stand fearlessly, he paid the penalty for daring to be in opposition to the ruling elements in prison. Here behind these walls, he reviewed his activities of the past, the efforts he had made to disorganize a corrupt society and replace it with a new order, and had they failed—? Where was his followers—? and where was this man Christ whom he had baptized? Was he of the living God, was He the great Saviour or needed He look for another, so St. John sent forth his friends to seek Jesus, and inquire of Him, "Art thou the Christ that should come or do we look for another?" And Jesus answered and said unto them

"Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see. Meaning by this, that the maimed were made whole, the blind to see and the poor being taught to unite, and so was John assured that the work was going forward.

The same question is being asked by society today. As they gaze at the spires and towers of the churches throughout the land, in these times of depression and anxiety. Things they are sure to see are a well dressed congregation, highly trained choir, well educated ministry, an abundance of modern culture. But do they see in spirit of Christ portrayed in the lives of its membership—? Do we honor him as members of the choir, as church members—? If not we are living testimonies to the failure of the Christian church, pointed at by those who oppose the work of the living God. The church can no longer sidestep the issues of the day. It must stand forth fearlessly and justify its existence. This is truly a dark picture, stated Mr. Rowland. But thank God its not all dark, for truly we can point to the achievements of the church throughout the land and say, as did Christ himself, "Go show unto the world the things which ye have seen and heard. "For with the aid of institutions set up by the church of God" the blind still receive their sight, the sick are made whole and the poor are ministered unto. Mission work of the United Church alone in Western Canada is responsible for saving to the world a fine race of Indian people that were fast disappearing forever. 19 branch hospitals are heading the needs of 401 in-patients and 2651 out-patients annually, and doctors performed 107 successful operations each year are placed where the ministrations of Christianity are still being performed. Such Christian institutions as the Toronto Sick Children's Hospital which lifted the lives of innocent children out of vicious and unhealthy surrounding where their lives were nearly crushed out, and sent them forth sound of body and mind to go through life in the service of God and fellow man. These are all accomplishments of Christianity. The many services rendered by our government such as relief, old age pensions and many others all find their beginning in the teachings of Jesus Christ through the church.

As a church and as people we owe it to ourselves to observe the great work of the church of the living God, and go forth to show things we have seen and heard. Be justify our fine works and point them out to our doubting friends.

Runaway Car

When making his rounds on his bakery route on Wednesday evening Mr. Frank Whiteman left his Pontiac coupe in gear for just a few moments outside the home of Geo. Mason, where he was making a call. He returned in time to see it start up of its own accord and proceed down the street a few yards, where it suddenly left the road, gone over a steep embankment, and just missing a large elm tree in its pathway and finally settling down in the soft mud of the swamp at the rear of Alex Mastin's property where it sank deep enough to stall the motor. No damage was done to the car fortunately, and with the assistance of several men who happened to be passing by, it was pulled out on the road again, with no more serious consequences than a few moments' delay on the part of the owner and perhaps a slight scare.

Darkness Ends Game

Several of the local ball fans journeyed down to Bath last Stirling was on Daylight Saving Time on Friday evening as they ascended to witness the first ball game of the season which was called off at the end of the fifth inning because of darkness. The game was an exhibition affair between Stirling and the smart team from Bethel and was quite satisfying to the contenders as far as it went, being featured with fine field plays and heavy hitting by both teams Dickman in the mound for Stirling, playing his first game of the season found difficulty in controlling his speed ball in the early stages of the game but steadied down as time went on to turn in a good performance after walking the first two men. Broadworth, flashy pitcher of the Bethel squad turned in a fine game on the mound as well as at the plate, getting two hits out of three trips to the plate, one of them a homer through centre field fence, also doing the same thing in the third when he smacked one deep into right field, he went all the way around but the throw to home beat him. These were the two outstanding features that sent the, crowd into cheers. The game was well attended and when called because of darkness left the Stirling boys in the lead, one run, having the big end of a 8-5 score.

With the large number of real fans in Stirling and the ambulance of fine material it is a wonder that Stirling is not represented in some of the leagues in these parts. These fans need pretty much the same on Friday night and they sure like to play.

The line-ups—

CHRISTEN TWO AT CARRYING PLACE

Rev. E. F. Swayne is The Officiating Clergyman

Carrying Place, May 21.—Sunday Service in the United Church was unusually well attended as a large congregation braved the inclement weather to come. During the service two small children were christened by Rev. E. F. Swayne, the one the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Greer Black and the other the small son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Wright. The two little girls were well delivered and well received. There remain only a few more services to be held before Mr. Swayne will deliver in the local church; and though welcoming Mr. Saunders to his new circuit, the various congregations join in the pastor's regret preparing to leave.

The congregational get-together held at the United Church Hall on Wednesday evening last, brought a fine attendance to hear Rev. and Mrs. Swayne for the occasion. The "pot-luck" supper was a bounteous, and not an unpleasant one certainly. ONo programme was presented, but the time was spent in many members took the opportunity to greet and express their regrets to Mrs. F. Green and Miss Lela Black newly elected stewards by a large majority.

Late on Saturday evening some alleged reckless driver failed to negotiate the sharp turn at the north canal bank, when the pavement ceases and crashed the guard rail, erected there for such as he. No very disastrous results are forthcoming; but the sound of the impact attracted the attention of the bridge-tender on duty at the time and he counted the remains of the number of the damaged car. If all the scene under his own power without anyone identifying the driver, but the front axle was badly bent. The frame was also somewhat damaged.

Mr. Walter Miller of Trenton, is spending several days this week at the Corrigan, home painting and paperhanging.

Trenton softball loop schedule get under way at the old Bayside Park battlefield on Monday evening when the Trenton Legion line up to go up against the strong Whitby Canners team. Pre-season guesses are often worse than no guesses yet it seems from the talent shown by these two teams that they should be the leaders for the season. The local team is managed by Will Le Four and will contain only three or four local players, the remainder being Trentonians. Harry Smith of the Trenton Y.M.C.A. will coach the team which will include such well-known stars as Al Steenburgh, Roy Smith, Leo Cosgrove, "Pat" Culverson, Vic Willis and others.

Yet scientific skin tests show Lifebuoy is more than 20% milder than many so-called "beauty soaps."

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, May 21 (AP)—Specialties today kept the stock market fires aglow. International Nickel was firm while shares of Dome, Mc-Intyre and Canadian Pacific ruled fairly steady. On the curb, Lake Shore improved fractionally but Hiram Walker was unchanged.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"Woman in Red"

Belleville's Most Popular Star, Barbara Stanwyck, Enacts her Greatest Role

The eagle-eyed fans who seem to go to neighborhood movies with the express purpose of tripping up the producers spying mistakes in their pictures are about to meet their Waterloo.

Not, of course, that many of these same fans would be fully equipped to discover any technical errors, in the screen presentation of a fashionable drama about; but even if they were, they wouldn't be able to find one single error in "The Woman in Red", the new Barbara Stanwyck starring vehicle for First National Pictures which comes to the Capitol Theatre tonight.

For the first time, a swanky horse show is presented on the screen in all its glory, and those who have been brief flashes before, but "The Woman in Red" shows one complete, filmed with such noted horse experts as Marcotta Hellman, Arthur Perkins, Bob Monroe and Quincy Scott as technical supervisors.

The exclusive Los Angeles Breakfast Club, scene of numerous horse shows, was rented for these scenes and many prize-winning thoroughbred horses were obtained for the occasion.

In the picture, Miss Stanwyck, as an impoverished young horsewoman from Kentucky, rides a horse named "Queen of May", supposedly owned by Genevieve Tobin. "Queen of May" is actually "Magna McDonald", a blue-ribbon mare owned by Marcotta Hellman, Warner Bros. polo czars and Los Angeles socialite, who has a part in the picture, "Magna", according to her owner has been every inch of her class with the exception of "Roxy Richard", who is still national champion after five years.

"Reader," adds John Eldredge in "The Woman in Red" by Capt. Alvin Sklles of La Jolla, California, and is considering the best "under-15-hands" horse in the country. And all the other horses that take part in the film show are bona fide winners.

The other technical details in the Barbara Stanwyck picture are equally authentic, so that even the most evident horse-lover won't discover anything that isn't true to life.

AT THE BELLE

"The Tenth Man"

William Powell, Myrna Loy and May Robson on Exceptional Bill

"The Thin Man" Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer-Cosmopolitan picture at the Belle today and Wednesday, matinee and evening, is one of the most unusual pictures to come out of Hollywood in many a long day.

The detective mystery, it presents the William Powell in the finest and most amusing sleuthing role of his career, ably assisted by charming Myrna Loy as his wife, Nora.

Full of Suspense

As Nick Charles, a retired detective, Powell goes to New York with his loveable, wealthy wife for the holidays. There, against his will, he becomes involved in a triple murder mystery which remains a baffling, bewildering problem until the very last few feet of the final reel are unwounded and the method by which the solution is reached should receive an academy award for its originality.

The picture never lags in interest, keeps the audience on the edge of their seats every minute, and furnishes respite from the tension it gives to jaded nerves by a liberal sprickling of humorous situations and dialogue.

Maureen O'Sullivan does well with her role as Dorothy, the daughter of the "Thin Man", who is responsible for all the mystery in the story.

Minna Gombell Excellent

Minna Gombell, usually seen in comedy roles appears in the new picture in a highly emotional part and puts it over in splendid order. Nat Pendleton and Porter Hall appear in splendid roles.

May Robson Outstanding

May Robson lends the glamour of her genius to "Strangers All," the second feature attraction on the same program, and in which she is co-featured with Preston Foster.

The picture is outstanding as to star, cast in general, direction and story. With mother love as its basic theme, it weaves in the strongest threads of life and love. As the principal character, a mother who finds herself reaping a whirlwind when she had only sowed her children through their early years, Mira Robson has a perfect field day for the display of her usual skilled manner, she comes through with a splendid performance. In other roles Florine McKinney, William Bakewell, James Bush, Suzanne Kaaren, Samuel Hinds and Clifford Jones cover themselves with credit. Edwin C. Hill the talking reporter introduces the Belle latest news features, "The Thin Men" will be presented daily at 2.40 and 9.20 p.m. "Strangers All" at 2.40, 7.30 and 9.30 p.m.

"TOMORROW YOUTH"

Martha Sleeper always wanted to be a great dancer, but a chance discovery of her photograph by a motion picture director gave her her first screen chance and she has been in pictures ever since.

For Miss Sleeper, who came to Hollywood with her mother just a few short years ago, had moved out of a home that the director was moving into and accidently left a picture of herself behind. The director found the photo and leaped upon finding the girl and using her in a picture he was making.

Needless to say, he found Miss Sleeper and she made her debut before the camera in "Mail Man".

Her latest screen contribution is the feminine lead in the photoplay "Tomorrow's Youth," which is at the Capitol Theatre tonight.

John Mijjan has the male lead opposite her, while little Dickie Moore and Gloria Shea are also featured.

"Dr. Barry" Sugar Bowls tonight and don't forget the greatest of revivals tomorrow "Flying Down To Rio".

Homers, Triples and Doubles Rattle from Pirates' Bats To Sink Giant's Ship 11-4

Carl Hubbell Blasted Off Mound in Four Frames

CHICAGO DEFEATED

White Sox Have Only Game And One Half Lead

By HERBERT W. BARKER

Staples pitched up infield consisting principally of a lot of guys named Floyd, Pittsburg Floyd in fact driven themselves above the .500 mark in the standings for the first time since the opening day of the National League season.

With Floyd Herman at first base in place of Gus Suhr, Floyd Young subbing at second for Harry Lavagetto and Floyd Vaughan at short as usual, the batting Corsairs rallied Fydie Field fences with a home run, five triples, two doubles and six singles yesterday and walloped the league leading New York Giants 11 to 4.

Carl Hubbell, usually a Pittsburg nemesis, started for the Giants but retired in considerable disorder after lov four innings during which the Pirates thumped him for five runs and six hits. Allyn Stout and Frank Gabler followed but they all looked alike to the Bucs.

Meanwhile Red Lucas, making his first start of the campaign, blanked the Giants with three hits for eight innings. He folded up a bit in the ninth and gave up five hits and four runs but they served only to make the score a trifle more respectable. Woody Jensen led the Pirate attack with a home run and two singles while Young kicked in with a pair of triples. Suhr, suffering from a split finger, went to right field in the ninth and then kept his string of consecutive games played intact. He now has appeared in 506 in succession.

Pirates New Fifth.

The victory left the Pirates in fifth place a half game behind St. Louis Cardinals and only four games out of first place. The Giants' loss over Brooklyn was shaved to a game and a half. In the only other National League game, Bill Lee held Boston Braves to six hits and Chicago's third place Cubs won, 5-0 to draw to within a half game of the Dodgers.

Chicago's White Sox's 7-2 beating from the New York Yankees, coupled with Cleveland's 4-1 conquest of Boston Red Sox, left the White Sox's lead over the Indians to a game and a half in the American League. The pale hose are three games and nine hits but the ex-Yale star was effective in the pinches.

Carl Pircher, making his first start for Chicago, was reached for ten hits by the Yankees. A home run was all that saved the Red Sox from a shut-out as Cleveland's Hudlin and Oral Hildebrand kept right other hits well spaced.

The champion Detroit Tigers mowed down Philadelphia's Athletics 8-6 in ten innings and now trail fourth place by one percentage point. Washington, another step to the rear, trounced the St. Louis Browns, 8-3 as Pinas Van Atta, former Yankee, failed in his debut for the Browns.

TWO MAIN BOUTS ARE SCHEDULED

Winner of Second Bout Will Meet Winner of First

Two main bouts over the one hour limit, the best two out of three falls, have been arranged by the promoters for Thursday night's charity wrestling show at the arena, the Kiwanis Club athletic committee announced that today. Heading the originally advertised Johnnie Gyroffy-Al Dunlop return bout, over the hour limit, the semi-final scrap between Dan Petroff, the Russian Lion, and Walter Parnell, the Canadian exponent of the drop-kick, bout will also be the best two out of three falls over the one hour limit. These arrangements were completed by the promoters for two special reasons, they stated today.

First, the Petroff-Parnell bout is a main attraction clash as the winner of the tilt will be been promised a shot at the winner of the Gyroffy-Dunlop match and secondly the promoters felt that due to the holiday atmosphere the fans should be afforded a little added attraction for their money. A substitution in the opening bout of the evening was also announced owing to unforseen circumstances and sees a new face being introduced to Belleville fans in the personal of Emil Daly, the German welterweight who meets Frank Slavik, the Hungarian adonis.

Due to the extra demand for ringside seats the arena officials have already ordered 100 new ringside seats for the return bout between Al Dunlop, the Cleveland bedman and Johnnie Gyroffy, the agile Hungarian favourite in Belleville wrestling circles. The Kiwanis Club have issued orders that Thursday night's main bout must finish inside of the hour and the winner of this scrap is scheduled to meet the winner of the Parnell-Petroff bout. Chairman Geo. Lee announced today that extra attendants would be posted around the ring to scotch any outbreaks of rowdyism while the referees, Jack Forbes of Toronto and Bert Wells of Belleville have been engaged as the officials of the night.

Handlers of Ross Against Donovan Being Third Man

New York, May 21 (CP)—Raucous shouts of protestation disturbed the quiet of the Catskill Mountains today.

It was Sammy Plan and Art Winch, co-managers of Barney Ross, crying to the countryside what would happen if Referee Arthur Donovan were used for the May 28 Clash of their boy and Jimmy McLarnin, king of all the welterweights.

Donovan was the third man in the ring last September when Jimmy outpointed the stylish Chicago Jew to regain the championship. He cast the decisive vote in favor of the Vancouver Cub in a chorus of "robberry" by Messrs. Plan and Winch.

Vacations were the vogue in the mountain training camps of McLarnin and Ross yesterday but the official word got around that the State Athletic Commission favored Donovan as referee for the third fight of the game—once Jimmy and Barney contented themselves with roadwork and calisthenics, leaving the news-corps at the camps pretty hard up for excitement. Perhaps that was the reason the report about Donovan started.

"Over my dead body Donovan will referee the fight," blurted Plan.

He had to stop for wind and Winch broke in:

"Why Donovan is just plain incompetent, and we say that, he favors McLarnin. What saps we'd be to let him in there again."

Plan had regained his breath and suggested they name Jack Dempsey, one-time Manassa mauler and now successful restaurateur to referee.

WRESTLING

Edmonton, May 21 (CP) — Four grapplers from Eastern Canada and three from the Prairie West were Canadian championship wrestling covers today. Two 1934 champions—Terry Evans and Joe Schilmer, both of Toronto—retained their titles last night as the action-packed string of 30 wrestling bouts was brought to a close. Eight of the bouts were refereed by falls.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

At the request of the officers of the South Rod A. C. the Belleville Senior Softball League executive granted that organization a one year's leave of absence from the league yesterday. An application from the Rod and Gun A. C. was immediately filed and is in the hands of Secretary Charles Tenworth, requesting the latter club be allowed to assume S.R.A.C. dates. In all probability the request will be granted, it was intimated by league officials today. The officers of the S.R.A.C. have incurred considerable debt of late surrounding the moving and enlarging of their clubhouse to a water-front site. The club feels it is in no financial condition to purchase softball uniforms, equipment and financially back their team adequately and at the same time meet their financial obligations for the next year. Once the S.R.A.C. gets firmly established in their new surroundings, however, they expect to flourish as before. In the meantime the St. Paul Street A. C. will carry the softball banner for Foster Ward. Incidentally two newly launched teams will officially open the current O.A.S.A. season in Belleville this evening when the Central Park when the St. Paul Street A. C. meet the Young Canada Cubs on the old Victoria Hill. Other local softball teams open in Tweed and Bedersville at the same time.

The wrestling committee of the Kiwanis Club announced that two referees had been engaged for Thursday night's wrestling show and show that secs a return bout between Al Dunlop and Johnnie Gyroffy. Both Jack Forbes and Bert Wells have been engaged as referees, but which one will both be on the job during the main bout of the evening. Judging from the manner in which the Kiwanians lambasted last week's show there should be at least two referees for each wrestler, in each bout. Referee Forbes told us last week he would not consider refereeing the preliminaries when such an important main bout was on the card. We look at though Wells will get the call for the curtain raiser and perhaps the Parnell-Petroff fight while Forbes will attend to the main go of the evening. Incidentally that semi-final bout over the 45 minute limit will be no "plain tea" affair as we believe it is at present. Each will be out to win the limelight as a main-bester at Belleville, but we must first topple over that aggressive St. Catharines pro football player, Walter Parnell. Never in the history of the grappling game in Belleville has there ever been so much controversy as there has been in the present sport fans since the last Gyroffy-Dunlop scrap. "It looks like a honey".

Local scholastic athletes fared very well in the district interscholastic meet held at Picton on Saturday last. A total aggregate amount of points rimmased found the Trenton high school in the lead with B.C.I. 2nd, second and Cunningham's O.S.D. athletes did themselves noble to win the intermediate group honors while George Laughlin's B.C.I. juniors annexed the junior group honors when Frank Sunderland was the individual junior championship by taking practically all of the events in his class. The B.C.I. intermediate half mile team ran one, two, three, while the local Collegiate girls amassed a total of seven first points, a creditable showing taking into consideration the stiff opposition that today's results indicated. Incidentally each school present qualified individual athletes to compete in the Eastern Ontario meet at Kingston on Saturday next and the local Collegiate will hold its field and track meet on the 30th.

Chairman George Lee issued the first half of the Kiwanis junior town baseball league yesterday which sees the four local junior clubs swing into action on the afternoon of the 4th at the Fair Grounds in Belleville. Chairman Lee wants it to be known that the schedule as issued will not be drafted and published prior to the first of July, in the meantime the games after the 24th will be played at the Alemite grounds on Wednesdays. Incidentally the local intermediates are hard at it, practicing with the season drive days in preparation for their opening at Gananoque on Victoria Day.

After the Kingston Ponies dropped three straight games to the B.A. clubs, the Kingston sport commentator says: "At least the Crabs looked far better than Belleville, Oshawa or Peterboro". Just how the far-seeing Kingstonian City writer arrives at such conclusion is hard to decipher, but he has yet to see the 1935 editions of Belleville clubs in action. Tomorrow tells the tale, however, when the local "Radios" pry off the 1935 C.O.B.L. lid at Kingston versus the hard-hitting Ponies. After last night's practice Coach Mills announced that either Ernie Smith, his slingshot curve ball artist, or Art Calbeau, the newly acquired speed baller, would start on the hillock for the local retaining Jack "Chief" Williams for relief duty and a sure starter in Belleville on the holiday. Doubtlessly Ray Smith, the team's leading hitter in batting in runs last year, will start at the initial sack with "Scotty" Green at second, Dean Ford at short and Oscar McGinnis at the hot corner. Mel Little and Micky Sere, two up-and-coming juniors, will be carried as utility infielders for the time being at least. In the outer garden are Johnnie Kerr, Alex Welr and "Gerry" Grey will likely start off with Earl Darrah and Coach Mills in reserve. Jim Barcher, late of Tweeds, will replace "Freeney" Mills behind the bat as the catcher for the locals, it being the first time in 17 years of service that Mills has been an absentee from a Belleville opening baseball game. Doubtlessly Kingston's newly acquired hurler, Jack Clancy, will get the call to pitch the opener at Kingston but is if there are not, too many "squawks" from Brockville. Recently the Island Town has asked those interested to compare Clancy's signature with the one affixed to his request for a transfer. "Now just what could Belleville offer Clancy that they did not linger too long in the Island Town."

For those interested in Canada's national game, lacrosse, the season will be officially ushered-in with a Kiwanis exhibition at the Belleville Arena on the night of May 24 when the local Aalmac boys team will battle stick with the fast Scarboro "Grads" of Toronto, the team which eliminated the Belleville Tecumsehs lasts in the O.A.L.A. play-downs last year. The local aggregation is working out quite regularly of late with much well known players as Joe Kilkie, Jack Hughes, Doug Bowers, Gibb, Ed Goodier, the Day boys and others being on hand. Skipper Bill Fry informs us he has made arrangements to strengthen the local squad with a couple of fast imports for this game versus the Scarboro boys on the 24th.

The London Tecumseh nine defeated the St. Mike's softballers 7 to 3 in an exhibition game last night. Cole and Kilkie were the battery while battery while Hughes and Galnor labored for the visitors.

President Jack Meagher of the B.A.S.A. announced today that only a limited number of season tickets would be sold in fans desiring such for senior ball games at the reduced price has been arrived at which should prove a boon to the sale of season baseball tickets this year. President Meagher says they are going like "hot cakes" and there are only a few being disposed of, so those interested in the game should act early and avoid being disappointed.

Daily Short Story

LOST NERVE

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

The big house on the corner has a black-and-gold sign near the side door:

"Dr. F. C. Caulkin."

"Dr. A. W. Caulkin."

Those passing see it and some there think. "Father and son. Wonder if they ever fight over cases. Others pass and don't see it at all.

Yet the sign is bright and new. It hasn't been there long. Phil Caulkin can still remember almost every word, every circumstance that led to its being placed there.

He had been—thus was before — at Mrs. Arnold's house, one of more than a score of guests. Mrs. Arnold, vastly making introductions has been interrupted, while saying: "Phil, there is someone you ought to know," and was leading him toward a dark-haired girl. He was then forced to introduce himself.

A Doctor

When she called him "Doctor" he winced slightly and said, "How did you know I was a doctor?"

She answered, "Some one told me. I'm Alice Wright."

He talked to her awhile and then, the shifting of guests, was shunted aside. He remembered her, the direct way in which she looked at people, her low voice and the manner in which she had seemed to be studying him.

Two months later he met her again at a dance at the Kayle country place and realized how much he had been thinking of her. That, really, was the night it began, the night that Katherine Kayd had the attack of acute appendicitis.

She collapsed shortly after midnight and was moaning on a bed when Phil was brought to her. With labored breath she described her symptoms. A voice said, "Sounds like acute appendicitis" and Phil turned to find Miss Wright beside him. "I used to be a trained nurse" she explained, "It would take hours to get her to a hospital from here. Her uncle is a surgeon and he keeps a surgical kit here. There's ether in it. Don't you think you ought to—"

She didn't finish the question. Phil's hands began to shake. His throat hurt and for a moment he couldn't answer. Again he looked at the girl on the bed, she moaned and rolled restlessly. "It hurts," she sighed. "It hurts."

Phil suddenly found himself giving orders only to find each of them anticipated by Miss Wright. He was taking off his coat when she got out her hand to stop him.

Emergency

"Would you really do it?" she asked. "Operate on her like this?"

"If I have to," he answered. "I'll have to examine her first, of course. But if it's acute the appendix may rupture before we can get her to a hospital. After all I'm a doctor and—"

He stopped, puzzled by the smile on her face.

"So you've remembered that, have you?" she asked. Your nerve has come back? You see, I had ideas about you and that—that operation when the child died. You thought it was your fault and you lost your nerve. You thought you could never perform another, didn't you? Don't you realize that nearly all doctors have to go through that?"

He didn't answer, watching Katherine Kayd get up and walk out of the room. Alice turned. She threw out her hands in a little gesture. "There's nothing wrong with her," she said. "I took her here to take the symptoms. You see, I once lost my nerve and a friend did much the same thing to me. When I realized a life might depend on me, why—well, I got my nerve back."

Phil began to understand. "You—you're a doctor?" he asked. She nodded. "I was a trained nurse first," she explained. "And I don't think I'm a very good doctor. But I've heard that you're a good one and what a pity it was you lost your nerve."

That was the night it began—the road which led to the sign which people so often mistake for that of father and son.

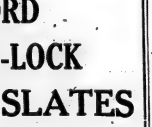
Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating supper, being liver and onions in pop's honor, and pop insisted his saying, Enter fine, in fact the last word in liver and onions, than wich there is no lester word. Dont be surprised or alarmed if I ask for about 4 helpings, he said.

That's rite, gloat over me, ma said, and pop said, What the douce do you meen, aren't you eating any?

I'm not eating anything unless you could stretch your imagination far enough to call 3 unstuffed olives and a piece of unbuttered toast something, ma said.

Come to the unfortunate conchsion that the cap way I'll ever diet successfully is to skip a meal completely 2 or 3 times a week, the result seems to be that I'll have to resign myself to an empty feeling while I watch you beat in the 7th heaven of culinery delight, she said, and pop said, That's too bad, and touch of all nites especially, when the liver and onions touch the highth of earthly perfection.



Go ahead and rub it in, that's rite, fill the empty cup of wee to overflowing, ma said, and pop said, Well for Pete sake dont take it so hard, how can I enjoy this lavish feast with a starving wife gazing pitifully at every forkfull?

Dont mind me, just steep yourself in fragrant bliss while I content myself with my remaining olive, ma said, and pop said, Yes gods how can I eat with this crying on? My appetite is fading like a blighted flower, I wont take another bite until you help yourself and pitch in, he said.

Well my goodness I'm sure I dont want to be selfish and deprive others for my own self centered ends, ma said, Ill take just the suggestion of a bite, for your sake, she said.

And she took a pritty good set, pop saying, I appreciate the sacrifice, I assure you.

And he took 2 more helpings and ma only took one more.

Lieutenant Cecil brought his plane down into the meadowland and began to work over its stalled motor. As he worked he whistled London's latest popular hit, for it was typical of the man to be light-hearted.

His was careless of the immediate future and his surroundings. That the district might be infested with countless enemies seemed not to bother him at all. Expertly he worked, correcting the adjustment that had caused the engine to stall.

Not once did he give the country around him a single glance. Even if he had, probably he would not have seen the figures crouching in the undergrowth of the forest's edge. The repairs completed, he shut off the motor and jumped to the ground.

He wanted to stretch his legs and light a smoke before continuing his return flight to camp. Some gorgeous Wynde blooms caught his aesthetic eye. He walked over to examine them more closely. And as he bent over them it happened!

SNAP UP OFFERS MADE BY HITLER IS BRITISH VIEW

New Security Parley Urged as Logical Answer

LABOR CALLS HALT

French Disappointed by Reichsfuehrer's Address

(By Harold F. Brennan)

(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, May 22 (AP)—The convocation of a new European security and disarmament conference was regarded in political circles today as the most logical answer to the conciliatory gesture contained in Reichschancellor Hitler's foreign policy address.

The press generally urged Der Fuehrer's offers to participate in an air Locarno and naval limitation and bind Germany against aggression be immediately snapped up.

"This is indeed the supreme moment for achieving practical limitation of arms," The Times commented.

"It is now for the other powers, especially Great Britain, to reply in the same spirit." The Daily Herald, labor organ, asserted.

Daily Mail Enthusiastic

Lord Rothermere's Daily Mail was unqualifiedly enthusiastic while even The Daily Express, long critical of Hitler's policies, cheered the tone of his address.

Only The Morning Post was hostile, saying the chancellor offered nothing new and the other powers would demand more than Hitler for their own protection.

What was interpreted as Hitler's attempts to win British support, especially by his offers to conclude a defensive air covenant, and protect civilians against aerial bombing, aroused unusual interest in parliament, in view of the current debate on expansion of the Royal Air Force.

Labor Calls For Halt

London, May 22 (CP Cable) — Taking Hitler's 13 points in the spirit, they will make another call for a halt in the armaments race, Labor members of parliament and representatives of labor bodies approved the draft of the speech with which Clement Attlee will lead for the labor position in the debate following the government's exposition of defence policy in the house of Commons this afternoon.

Paris, May 22 (CP-Havas) — Judged by the tone of leading newspapers here, Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler's address was a disappointment to this nation and the effect created reaction, Havas says.

Characteristic headlines were "sixteen pages of criticism against other nations" in Le Journal, and "nothing but nothing new" in the Petit Parisien. Le Journal emphasizes he says, that Germany is "aggressive as regards the treaty between France and the Soviet Union."

Hitler's address was viewed by French officials in the world context declared to weaken Franco-British cooperation, but with, nevertheless, a certain conciliatory note.

"If Hitler would show his good will by coming back to the League of Nations," one French official declared, "that would be worth a million words."

HUNGARY AS SEEK RETURN OF LAND.

HUNGARY AS DISMEMBERED BY THE TREATY OF TRIANON

Hungarians in the United States, led by a Hungarian daily in Cleveland, the Szabadsag (Liberty) hope to get one million names on a petition to the League of Nations to "correct" the Treaty of Trianon, which dismembered Hungary following the world war. Out of Hungary's original 256,000 square kilometres of territory, Czechoslovakia was given 63,000. Jugoslavia 62,000, Roumania 102,000 and Austria 4,000. Out of Hungary's population of 20,886,000 people, 3,870,000 were transferred to Czechoslovakia, 4,000,000 to Jugoslavia, 5,365,000 to Roumania and 385,000 to Austria. The Hungarians say the treaty gives no hope for them.

1,500 Planes in 2 Years Planned by Great Britain Hitler Speech 'A Help'

'No Need For Panic' Says Baldwin Referring to Address

CLOSE STUDY NEED

'Spirit of Sympathy and Candor' is Promised

(By George Hambleton)

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON May 2—(CP Cable)—Within two years Great Britain will raise her first-line strength in the air to 1,596 planes, Stanley Baldwin the British air strength to parity with France. It is also the figure which accordingly to Adolf Hitler's declarations is the German objective. The government's figure is 336 air planes at home, excluding fleet air arms and planes in the Empire overseas.

The British program was announced by Stanley Baldwin, Lord President of the Council, in the House of Commons today and simultaneously by Lord Londonderry, Secretary for Air, in the House of Lords.

Mr. Baldwin spoke for almost an hour. Other points of his speech were:

Rapid production of the increased air force is to be organized.

Measures for defence against any future attack will be taken.

There is no need for panic.

Hitler's Speech a Help

The British Government welcomes Adolf Hitler's speech of last night as a "help in general settlement" and will give it the closest attention in a spirit of sympathy.

At the outset of his speech Mr. Baldwin referred to Chancellor Hitler's address as a statesmanlike declaration. Parts of it were evidently intended as a reply to Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald's speech of May 2, in which he urged the overwhelming security and confidence—difficulties and dangers which could only be removed by a concrete agreement.

Spirit of Sympathy and Candor

"The British Government recognized Hitler had made more precise declarations of the greatest importance and in a number of respects had indicated what Germany was prepared to do.

"We regard these declarations as of the greatest consequence," said Mr. Baldwin, "and we observe the closest and frankest study from all of us. His majesty's Government will devote to them their closest attention in a spirit of sympathy and candor.

We shall not fail to do our utmost to bring about in all practicable ways the possible by international agreement."

War Worst Prostitution

"It maze me almost physically sick to think that I and my friends and statesmen in almost every country—two thousand years after our Lord was crucified—have to consider ways and means how these men and children may have to be taken to hospital suffering from poison gas."

But there was some light in Hitler's speech, Mr. Baldwin said. All must work and make the farther reaches for the bondholders clear, knowing that the darkest hour comes before the dawn. "we must banish from the world the most fearful terror and the worst prostitution of war that has ever been known."

RADIAL LINE TO BECOME HIGHWAY

Physical Assets Will be Sold by Tender And Dismantled

Windsor, May 22 (CP)—The Windsor, Essex and Lake Shore Railway, purchased by the municipalities which it served for $290,000 in July, 1929, and at present carrying indebtedness totalling more than $1,200,000 will be dismantled as soon as its physical assets are sold, C. W. McDiarmid, president of the Guaranty Trust Company, trustee for the bondholders stated.

Tiri Ontario department of highways will take over the right-of-way and convert it into a highway as soon as the equipment is removed, Mr. McDiarmid said.

"For the last three years we have been trying to interest a number of private companies in taking over the road," explained the trust company president, "but the company withdrects as trustee for the bondholders has not been successful as we have asked for tenders for the physical assets of the road, with the intention of disposing of them to the highest bidder.

"It included the assets are 38 miles of rail trackage, 3,775 of wire and poles, 1,000 miles of aluminum trolley wire, five street cars, two electric locomotives and real estate. The real estate consists of car barns at Windsor, a machine shop and a car barn at Walkerville and waiting rooms at Leamington and Essex.

As soon as the tenders are in, Mr. McDairmid said, the company would operate between 30 and 40 men to salvage the road's equipment.

The municipalities which have a share in the road are Sandwich West, Sandwich East, Sandwich South, Maidstone, Colchester North, Garfield Gosfield and Mersea Townships, the towns of Essex, Kingsville, Leamington and the city of Windsor.

The railway first obtained its charter in 1870 but did not begin to operate until 1906. On September 13, 1922, it closed down because of financial difficulties interested became clamored by the amounting deficits.

RETRACTS WORDS SAID AT HEARING IN JARVIS CASE

Confidential Memorandum is Subject of To-day's Discussion

EVIDENCE AT TRIAL

Question of Charge to Jury in 1924 is Raised

Toronto, May 22.—(CP)— When Hon. A. W. Roebuck, Ontario Attorney-General, resumed his hearing today into the Hamilton Jarvis case, Joseph Sedgwick, solicitor in his department who conducted the Department, retracted the remarks he expressed at the opening of the hearing Monday regarding a confidential memorandum from the Ontario Attorney General's Department, handed out by Federal authorities.

Mr. Jarvis, now seeking a new trial, was convicted in 1924 on a charge of conspiring to defraud the province in Bond transactions. Mr. Sedgwick Monday expressed surprise at a former Federal Minister of Justice those days did not give, handing out this memorandum on the case.

Mr. Sedgwick said today he had discovered in departmental files the late Sir Allen Aylesworth, former Attorney General, had wired Federal authorities the Ontario Department had no objection to the memorandum being released.

Nature of Evidence

Nature of the evidence at the trial of Jarvis and Andrew Wyall, former member of his Toronto Investment firm, was the same, Sedgwick Hayden protended after telling the Attorney General the name of William Stone appeared at both trials. Mr. Hayden represented Mr. Jarvis, the only evidence not stressed by the trial judge in his charge to the jury, he said, was that connected with bond transactions, said Mr. Hayden.

Hayden charged the trial judge's suggestion that "two plus two" was not at the trial because his evidence was not corroborated by two Crown witnesses.

Sedgwick, inquiring if there was anything in the evidence to suggest what had been done in connection with Perail, suggested the Crown had offered to call that to the court.

"Is there any evidence of the judge saying why evidence of McPherson couldn't be adduced?" asked the Attorney-General, recalling Crown Counsel at the case had announced that Perail, Toronto lawyer, was present and would give evidence.

"No," replied Hayden.

"What I have said and the references made to the trial judge's charge to the jury had to do with succeeding facts," he declared

FOLEY RECEIVES ONE MORE YEAR

London Lawyer Pleads Guilty to Charge of Fraud

London, Ont., May 22—(CP)— Vincent Foley, former prominent London lawyer, pleaded guilty to three charges of conversation and fraud when his trial was resumed today and was sentenced to an extra year in Portsmouth Penitentiary, his fellow serving a four-year term. The sudden development brought to a close his second trial, Foley having served a first on charges of conversion involving $30,000 belonging to Mrs. Bruce family of Delaware Township, former clients of his.

The third charge was securing $1,500 by false pretense with intent to defraud, it was from Mr. B. and Mr. C; two out of town business men, Crown statements in the previous extortion case.

Three other charges involving conversion and conspiracy were dismissed.

Foley took the sentence calmly. His wife was in the courtroom as he was sentenced.

Sentences will be increased to five years. He has already served some seven months of the first sentence.

Judge Wearing expressed the hope the former lawyer would not become committed in prison but would "keep his chin up" and resolve to build a new life when he was released for the sake of his wife and three children.

Acting in the absence of Col. R. J. Greer, K.C., chief defence counsel in L. Smith of Toronto pleaded justice be tempered with mercy in Foley's case.

FIREMEN RESCUE THREE FAMILIES

Carried Through Swirling Smoke to Safety of Street

Hamilton, May 21—(CP)— Three families were rescued, escaped death, when fire broke out in apartments here early today. Through the efforts of police and firemen all the occupants of the building were carried through swirling smoke down stairways and ladders to safety and the flames later extinguished after heavy damage had been done. Constables Harry Allen and Tom McCurrie dashed into the building to waken the tenants and only with great difficulty were they able to remove Mrs. Betty Jackson, her 18-months-old-baby and her sister, Miss Teresa Brown, from the second floor.

In the meantime Mr. and Mrs. Neil Beaton, who also lived on that floor, were awakened by the noise and were rescued by fireman Addie Farr, who was off duty and passing the building at the time.

The fire department responded to the alarms with eight pieces of apparatus and other inmates of the building, Mrs. J. Hope, her two daughters and Alex Crabbe, made their way to safety. Windows blew out with the heat and flames streamed across the street. Damage was limited largely to the apartments of the families where the blaze originated, however.

Skyrocketing of Prices With Crash of Savings Seen if Bill Enacted

Man of Fixed Income First to Suffer is Claimed

STRAIGHT GRATUITY

U. S. Head States That Credit of Country is Safe

Washington, May 22 (CP)—Flaunting President Roosevelt's personal warning that the Patman $2,200,000,000 Bonus Bill invited "disastrous consequences," the United States House of Representatives today overwhelmingly passed by a two-thirds majority to override his veto today.

The vote was 322 to 86.

Issue Left to Senate

The issue thus was placed squarely up to the Senate. There the administration was counting on a "votes" margin to sustain the Roosevelt objections.

Should the Senate refuse the two-thirds majority necessary to override, early work on a compromise relief bill was expected.

The Roosevelt position today was construed by some as indicating he would not veto a plan whereby veterans could cash in their certificates at current instead of full value.

Washington, May 22 (AP)—President Roosevelt warned the United States Senate today in vetoing the Patman Bonus Bill today if enacted into law it would inevitably result in reckoning in uncontrollable prices and in the destruction of the value of savings."

Such a result, he declared in an unprecedented message he read to the House of Representatives and Senate, "will strike most cruelly those like the veterans who seem to be temporary beneficiaries."

"The greatest sufferer from skyrocketing prices is the man on a fixed income," he said. "Every disabled veteran on pension or allowance is on a fixed income. This bill favors the able-bodied veteran at the expense of the disabled veteran."

Mr. Roosevelt declared the benefits extended to veterans might be secured by the full $2,000,000,000 had been spent in behalf of them up to the end of the last fiscal year, not including the amounts received by those on relief.

The payment of the soldiers' bonus with new currency under the Patman plan would mean paying $1,600,000,000 more than the present value of the soldiers adjusted compensation certificates.

Straight Gratuity.

"It is a new straight gratuity or bounty to the amount of $1,600,000,000," he declared. "It does not base its payments on the dependency of the veterans provided in the original plan. For the remaining period of ten years they will have two payments.

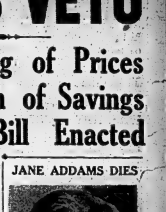
"This proposal, I submit, violates the very basic principle of the veterans' benefits so carefully formulated at the time of the war and also the entire principle of the adjusted certificate settlement of 1924."

Neglect of the enactment of the bill's supporters that it would contribute to the country's welfare by presidents said it doubtless would result in some expansion of retail trade but that "as a result of the belief of financial practice provided in this bill would not improve the conditions necessary to expand those industries from which we have the greatest employment."

Credit Is Safe.

The president pointed out that he already had sanctioned a deficit of $4,000,000,000 for the present budget dugs work relief program.

"I believe the credit of the United States is safe. But it cannot ultimately be safe if we engage in a policy of yielding to each and all of the groups that are able to enforce their demands for special and selfish consideration.



"To do so is to abandon the principle of government by and for the American people and to put in its place government by and for those who can exert the most pressure."

Senators Lund and Rainy River—Moderate northeasterly winds; partly cloudy and rather cool.

Lake Superior—Moderate winds; mostly fair with much the same temperature; possibly very light scattered showers over southeast portion.

Alberta—Mostly fair and moderately warm.

CHAIN LETTER CRAZE IS FALLING OFF

Although the dime "prosperity" chain letter craze is making the rounds of this as well as other cities throughout the country, the numbers, admittedly, are falling off. Less volume of mail has been published locally as reported. In fact—stead has come the dollar chain letters now being sold in Belleville by hopeful get-rich-quick aspirants.

No instructions regarding chain letters have been received at the local post office, it was stated by Postmaster J. V. C. Truslove today.

"I imagine from that the biggest fault the post office department would have with the chain letters is the fact, that money is being sent through the mails unregistered. This practice is always discouraged by the department."

Unless the dime in some letters lodges itself just after the stamp in the envelope, no trouble is being experienced in sending the mail through the cancellation machine, it was stated.

1000 Acres Woodland Burned in Apsley

Peterborough, Ont., May 22 (CP) —The eight forest fires raging in the Apsley district for the last few days were believed under control today. The fires had swept 1,000 acres of woody land and were said to have been the worst since 1922 when a large territory was burned over.

The fires are believed to have been incendiary in origin as they started in places where travelers seldom pass.

500 German-Born May Be Called Back

Kitchener, Ont., May 22 (CP) — About 500 German-born men between the ages of 18 and 45 in Kitchener and Waterloo come under the terms of Hitler's latest edict concerning military training for expatriated Germans abroad. How many of them might be back for a year of goose-stepping with the brown shirted army could be learned today.

Ernst Woelfle, president of the Canadian Society for German Citizens, said today he believed the majority of his club's seventy-five members would return to Germany if Hitler summoned them. His information, however, is that only men born in Germany in 1915 are expected to return.

Prominent Germans didn't think there would be much of an exodus.

CANCER CLAIMS FAMOUS WOMAN

Jane Addams Succumbs in Chicago After Operation

Chicago, May 22.—Jane Addams, world famous leader in social service and peace work, died last night at Passavant Hospital, where she had undergone a major abdominal operation.

She was 75 years old. She succumbed to cancer and intestinal obstructions, aggravated by a series of illnesses since childhood, combined with her advanced years and unrelenting work for the under-privileged.

The operation, to correct abdominal adhesions which were believed the result of a 1931 operation, was performed Saturday by Dr. Arthur Curtis after a consultation with Dr. James A. Britton, her personal physician, and two other doctors.

Hospital authorities, knowing her indomitable spirit, were optimistic for a time, and believed she might recover.

She took a turn for the worse and lapsed into coma early Tuesday. Death at 8.15 p.m. (C.D.T.)

It was announced immediately that funeral services would be held Thursday in Hull House Court, at 2.30 p.m.

Miss Addams' body is to lie in state in Rosen Hall, at Hull House, all day today and tomorrow, that friends and so the thousands who have known and respected Miss Addams may pay her tribute.
